Argument had been heard respecting the custody of a child whose parents are separated. The Judge decided that the child must remain in custody of the father until a decision was given in a Michigan court in June next. After judgment had been delivered, the mother ran to the child and clasped it in her arms, and was with some difficulty persuaded to relinquish her grasp. As the husband moved to leave the Court with the child, the mother drew a pistol and fired it at him. but his life was saved by the Sheriff who knocked up the weapon just in time.
