NOVEMBER.—It is the practice of many farmers to top-dress their grass lands with composted manure, as soon as they conveniently can after getting off the hay crop. It is a good practice. The manure protects the roots a little from the rays of the sun, and the first shower washes some of its nutritious properties into the soil and about the roots of the grass, so that they are stimulated to throw out new sets of leaves, which afford a still further protection both to plants and the manure. The surface of land in summer is hard enough to allow teams to pass over it without injury, either from the horses' hoofs or from cutting ruts.
