Checkered history of Japanese Shipped From Seattle.

Another test of the new immigration law which requires Orientals to be able po language will probably be inaugurated within a few days. This morning a Jap was brought on the steamer Main and was stopped by Officer McAllister of the Customs department, who has charge of these cases. The Jap was unable to comply with the provisions of the law, and was accordingly placed on the steamer again by the officer. He was however, given his freedom, so far as the officers of the vessel were concerned, and they intimated their entire lack of intention of taking him back again Seattle. So the Jap wandered back to the wharf and when he was threatened with arrest be walked up the gang-plank and looked worried at what it all meant. Captain McWilliams has become somewhat tired of carrying Orientals back and forth and is said to have intimated his willingness to have a test case, so that he will know exactly the position of the transportation companies. couver lawyers have given advice, it is said that the enew law has not a good foundation and that flaws can be found. -Vancouver World.
