Gives Some Interesting Gossip.

The Intanta Eulalia of Spain, whose volume of reminiscences, "Court Life from Within", has been published, is, as everybody knows, a rebel against royalty, remarks the London Daily News. Nor that she is intolerant of royalty in other people; King Edward, the Czar, and the Kaiser are all the subjects of her appreciation. But she refuses to be a royal personage herself in more than name. "People tell me," she observes. "that princesses are stupid. I wonder that we are not all idiots. During my life in Madrid

She depicts the roval life as an inget himself unexpectedly into his royal manner and speech as stiffly as if he were giving his mind to some lower breed of human being." The Infanta's repossessions on the subject of royalty, however, are more than power She even interprets Shakespeare in the light of them as a king-mocker

"We studied him with our governess to perfect our English, and, of course realized that his verse was beauti ful; but when his kings and queens spoke their lines they seemed to me to be playing parts that had been written to make fun of the claims of royaltv. My governess was indignant when I told her that. She said it was not true, that the speeches were meant to be taken seriously. 'But no!' I would cry. 'Don't you see? Shakespeare is making fun of us. He knew we were not so, but he could not tell it in those days. He is laughing at

He knew it was absurd.' "I still," she adds, "feel the same about Shakespeare's royalties." THE CZAR AS A MAN.

In spite of Shakespeare's-and her own-view of monarchs, the Infanta's man is unbounded. "He has more human tenderness," she declares than acquiesce in penalties he regretted." As for the Kaiser, the Infanta was especially struck by his religiosity as a monarch. And, next to this, by his love of Berlin, which he regards in the light of a daughter. One morning, while she was staying at the Schloss, she relates, the Kaiser came into her oom and asked her to come out with nim, as he wished to show her something interesting:

"I put on my hat at once, and we went down to a carriage which was waiting and drove away. I was wondering what surprise the Kaiser had

"'Look!' he cried suddenly, 'look at the streets! There have been torrents of rain and the weather only cleared up a few minutes ago, but do you see that there is not a speck of mud on two.

"It was true. The streets were sur risingly and absolutely clean. "You appear to dry as well as to weep them,' I said. "I have an army of road sweepers," he said. "Here they are,' and he pointed to a group of men energetically plying their brooms. 'I wanted you to see how clean I keep Berlin.'

"And is that all you have brought me out to see?" I said teasingly.

"Yes, all," he said, and we both The Infanta is willing to bear with the strict formalities of the Kaiser's Indian Fair at Ohsweken on Friday Court, but she object when lesser princelings imitate that strictness.
