There's a story that's old. But good if twice told, ctor of limited skill, Who cured beast and man On the "cold water plan, Without the small help of a pill. On his portal of pine Hung an elegant sign g a beautiful rill, And a lake, where a sprite, With apparent delight, orting, in sweet dishabille. Pat McCatty one day, As he sauntered that way, and gazed on that portal of pine, When the doctor with pride Stepped up to his side, , "Pat how is that for a sign?" "There's wan thing," says Pat, Ye've lift out o' that Thich, be japers, is quite a mistake, It's trim and it's nate, But to make it complate e shud have a foine burd on the lake." "Ab! indeed! pray, then tell, To make it look well, hat bird do you think it may lack ?" "Says Pat, "Of the same, I've forgotten the name, it the song that he sings is 'qu quack ?"

coordings of the spinters, and chiefly, perhaps, from a consciousness of good clothes. The married men stood grouped in corners and talked ot their every-day affairs. The young people clustered to gether in little knots, governed more or less by natural selection—only the veterans of several seasons pairing off into the discreter retirement of stoirs and hall angles. At the further end of the long drawingroom, Farnham's cyces at last flinghted upon the object of his quest. Alice sat in the midst of a group of young girls who had intrenched them-raselves in a corner of the room, and defied all the efforts of skirmishing youths, in teat upon firitation, to dialoge them.
