SURE TO WIN

Justice is, of course, loudly demanded by every litigant in a court of law, but it is a frequent infirmity of the human mind to confuse justice with one's own cause. The late Thomas B. Reed used tell an amusing story to illustrate

He was once retained by an enterprising client to prosecute an action.

On talking with the plaintiff's witnesses Mr. Reed found that their stories were far from consistent, so he reported the fact to his client and advised that the suit be dropped. The client was somewhat perturbed, but told the attorney he would have a talk with the witnesses and let him know the next morning what he had decided.

True to his word, he dropped in bright and early, wearing the cheerful look of one who has fought the good fight.

"The seen those witnesses," he explained, "and they say they must have been mistaken when they talked with you. They all see it alike now. I've also seen some of the jurymen, and they think I'll win. Now, if there's such a thing as justice in law, we can't lose."—

NOT IN IT.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, apropos of woman suffrage, said:

"Men of that sort—men of that stupid sort—treat us women like little children or pet animals. They make no account of us whatever. They are like old Calhoun White, of Ripon.

"Old Calhoun walked down the main street one morning in his best black broadcloth suit, with a white rose in his buttonhole and cotton gloves on his arree hands.

"Why, Calhoun,' said the barber, 'are you taking a holiday."

"Dish yere,' said the old man in a stately voice, 'dish here am mah golden weddin', sah. Sh'm sallybratin' hit."

"But your wife,' said the barber, 'is working as usual. I saw her at the tub as I came out. Why isn't she celebrating, too."

"Her?' said Calhoun, angrily. 'She hain't got nuffin' to do with it. She's mah. fou'th.'"—New York Tribune.

Templeman May be Governor of the Pacific Province.

Ottawa, Nov. 29.-Political plums in British Columbia are being rapidly dis-tributed now that the elections are over. A successor to Lieutenant-Governo A successor to Lieutenant-Governor Dunsmuir will be announced this week, and there is reason to believe that Hon. Wm. Templeman, Minister of Inland Revenue, has been tendered the position. Should he accept it his successor in the Cabinet will be Mr. William Sloan, who gave up his seat last session to Mr. Templeman.

Templeman.

Mr. Templeman, interviewed this even ing, intimated that he had no intention of leaving the Cabinet. The name of the new Governor, however, will be gazetted this week.

Messrs. Mitchell, of Parkhill (Liberal) and Doyle, of McGillivray (Conservative) were on Monday nominated to the Legis-lature in North Middlesex.

A Spanish Beauty

CHAPTER VI.

It was close upon sunset. Far off above the Devon hills the rosy clouds trooped and down here on the shore the sun was sinking into the sea in an oriflamme of gorgeous splendor. And half sitting, half lying on a mossy bank, with yellow water-willows trailing over her, a girl sat watching, with her heart in her eyes, that red light on sea and sky. Further down on the shore stood a young and pretty, but more matronly looking lady, holding by the hand a little-boy of four or five. They, too, watched that rosy sunlight in the wide ocean, and the boats with their white sails flitting to and fro.

"Very pretty, isn't it, Ernest?" Lady Clydesmore said to her little son; "and La Rose de Castile watches it as if she had never seen the sun go down before. But all its beauty won't gather the shells we came after, will it, Ernie? And,"—drawing out a jsweled watch the size of a sixpence—"it's only thirty minutes until dinner."

La Rose de Castile glanced over with a smile.

"Don't mind me, Beatrice; go with Ernie for the shells. I feel lazy, and prefer waiting here."

"To dream of my husband-elect," Lady Clydesmore responded, with a gay little laugh. "He will be here tonight for certain—happy fellow! Come, Ernie, let us collect our shells; time is on the wing."

Lady Evelyn's face clouded perceptibly at Lady Clydesmore's words. When she had gone she drew forth a letter, received the day before, and read it over.

Lady Selven's face clouded perceptibly at Lady Clydesmore's words. When she had gone she drew forth a letter, received the day before, and read it over.

ibly at Lady Clydesmore's words. When she had gone she drew forth a letter, received the day before, and read it over. It was dated "London," and signed "Vivian Trevannance," and it announced his speedy arrival at Royal Rest.

"I bring with me a friend," wrote Lady Evelyn's lover—"an American officer—like Ney, the 'bravest of the brave, a very hero of romance, whose life seems to have run after the fashion of a three-volume novel. His name is Drummond. You will like him, I am certain."

She read the letter over very slowly She read the letter over very slowly and thoughtfully and when she folded it up not all the rosy glow in sky or sea could light the gloom that lay on the perfect face.

Perhaps I am, for love such as I have read and heard of I have never felt. Will I marry Mr. Treyannance, and in a year or two meet him only once or twice a month, as mother does pape, and then with the cold formality of utter strangers? And yet—no, I can not be quit as wretched as she, for she loved another with all her heart, and lost him."

She drew forth from the pocket of her dress a little ivory mimiature. It was the portrait of Roderick Desmond, given her by her mother, and which she had an odd fancy for carrying about with her. The fair, frank heauty of the face had a charm for her; the violet eyes looked up at her full of boysh brightness and life; the lips seemed to smile. The colors of the picture were fresh and undimmed, the likeness a living, one.

"How noble he looks, how beautiful!" she thought. "Ah, one could love such a man as this! And they thought him a nurderer—with that face!"

So absorbed was she in her day-dream that the sound of approaching footsteps on the velvet sward behind never reach.

"You promised to ever seen. It was Inez dever again, only more speiritual, were a glore and only more pagintual, over eaguit, only more speiritual, were seen. "How noble he looks, how beautiful!" she thought. "Ah, one could love such a man as this! And they thought him a murderer—with that face!"

So absorbed was she in her day-dream that the sound of approaching footsteps on the velvet sward behind never reached her ear. Two gentlemen in evening dress, under their light spring overcoats, came down the sloping bank toward the strand.

"Look yonder," the elder of the two said, pointing with his mantilla. "The 'Sleeping Beauty,' is it? Or, perchance, the lady of whom you are in search."

The other looked languidly. The evening was warm, and he was not prepared in the last topic she started so perceptibly that he paused. He looked down on the splendid face beside him, with an annoyed sense of defeat and jealousy. "You promised to try and learn to love me when I was gone, Evelyn," he said, bending over her. "My dearest, have you kept your word?" Her eyes fell, her cheeks flushed. "I have striven; I have done my best. I think, sometimes, it is not in me to love at all, as you would have me. Spare me. No. Another time—"

She faltered and paused."

He thought of the ivory miniature, with a sharp, cruel twinge of jealousy.

murmured, in his sleepiest tone. "That stately poise of the head, that mantilla. stately poise of the head, that mantilla. Ah, yes; it is Lady Evelyn."
"What is that? A book? No, a portiait; yours, no doubt, and she is absorbed over it. Good heaven!" under his breath; "what a lovely face!"
"Yes, she is beautiful," Trevanance said placidly; "and—she hears us at last."

"No other has supplanted me?" he said, his eyes lighting. "You were the belle of London last season—"
He stopped. She had looked up at him, with all her Spanish blood affire. "You have said quite enough, Mr. Trevannance. The question is an insult. I disdain to reply."

[I disdain to reply."]

The crushing of a dry twig under his foot reached her ear; she glanced carelessly over her shoulder; the next instant she had arisen, and the miniature had fallen unheeded at her feet.

The meeting was very quiet; there was no scene. Mr. Trevannance took both her hands in his, and touched his both her hands in his, and touched his.

"Agreeably, I hope. Allow me to present my friend, Colonel Drummond, of the United States service. Colonel Drummond, the Lady Evelyn Desmond."
The American colonel bowed low before the stately beauty, the most perfect he had ever seen; and Lady Evelyn, with a proud inclination, just glanced at him, and started in a sudden surprise, and looked at him steadily and long. Where had she seen that handsome face, with its deep-blue, brillianteyes, its waving chestnut hair and gold-brown beard, before? It was as familiar as her own in the glass, and yet utterly strange.

"Allow me." The voice of her plighted husband broke the spell. "You have dropped this, I fanc."

With which my lady gayly took the American officer's proffered arm, and leading her little boy by the hand, and chattering airy small-talk, walked away. She was the merriest and most coquettish of little matrons, a coquette from her cradle, and would have flirted with the Wandering Jew, had that often-talked-of, seldom-seen Israelite appeared. "I am quite well," she answered, panting slightly. "A little startled, yet. I did not know you had arrived."

"Arrived early in the day. Would have sent word, but wished to surprise you. I had thought to find you in London still."

"Papa's illness induced us to leave town. Lord Clydesmore insisted on our returning here with our family. Yonder is Lady Clydesmore and Ernest. How surprised she will be at your unexpected apparition!"

The Housekeeper

During ten years' experience as teacher of cookery, and since I have been putting my theories into practice in my own home, no question has been asked more often than "How do you make good coffee?"

more often than "How do you make good coffee?"

I think many of the inquirers have been surprised that I have not given them a hard and fast rule at once, but instead I have said: "I will tell you how you can't have poor coffee." These are the maxims:

Buy good coffee. Grind just before using. Use a clean scalded coffee pot, not tin. Use freshly boiled water. Do not allow the aroma to escape. Do not extract the tannin.

The proportions are one rounding tablespoon of coffee to each cupful of water.

boiling water on the coffee in coffee pot. Let this boil two minutes, add remainder of water, remove to back of stove, and steep not more than ten minutes. Add tablespoon of cold water and serve at tablespoon of cold water and serve avonce.

The question of using egg for settling coffee is one over which there is much discussion. Every one admits that using egg in coffee makes a clear, sparkling beverage. When egg is used, the white should be mixed with the coffee in the coffee pot: add cold water, boil two minutes, and proceed as in plain coffee. A little more coffee is required when egg is used, as the albumen coats over the particles of coffee, and some of the strength as well as the flavor of the coffee is kept in.

When one enters a house where coffee is being made he remarks: "How good."

is being made he remarks: "How good the coffee smells!" We all like the aroma of good coffee, but when this de-lightful odor is allowed to be expelled, he coffee lacks just that much in flavor. If the coffee pot spout has not a cove

If the coffee pot spout has not a cover stuff it with paper to keep the aroma in. Tannin is the principal in both tea and coffee which is harmful. This is extracted by long boiling or by allowing it to stand too long on the grounds.

When the thrifty housekeeper wishes to save the leftover coffee should be turned off the grounds into an earthen bowl and kept covered. It is much better to learn about how much coffee will be required, and to make just the amount than to have coffee left to warm over.

The old fashioned method was to set away the tea and coffee pot without being emptied or washed. Too often to be warmed over for the next meal, adding more tea or coffee with additional water. We cannot be too thankful that cooking schools and scientific research have relegated such notions to the dark ages. The harmfulness of coffee depends largely upon the method of making coffee a wholesome beverage is to keep the tannin from being extracted.

Three cupfuls of buttermilk, one scant ceaspoonful of soda, one-half teaspoonful of salt, two cupfuls of flour, one of corn neal.

Warm one pint of milk and one pint of water, put half of the mixture in stone jar, add five teacupfuls of graham flour and two cupfuls of wheat flour, one sugarspoonful of brown sugar, beat until smooth, add rest of milk and wauntil smooth, add rest of milk and water, lastly one cup of yeast. In the morning take out one cupful of batter before adding one-half teaspoonful of salt and one sponful of soda dissolved in a little water. Every night mix twothirds graham and one-third flour, according to the amount desired; add milk once in a while when it can be spared—it helps to brown them nicely.
Cheaper and healthier than buckwheat.

BEST PANCAKES. BEST PANCAKES.

While doing up the evening work put the required amount of sour (thick) milk into a mixing bowl. Beat in flour enough to make a thick batter. Beat in salt, cover, and set aside. In the morning dissolve soda in cold water. Beat into batter thoroughly. Beat the required number of eggs for amount of batter light. Fold lightly into batter. This will hasten the breakfast getting and you will have paneakes fit for a king.

CORNMEAL CAKES. CORNMEAL CAKES.

Sift together one and one-half large cups cornmeal, one heaping teaspoon baking powder, teaspoon salt, table-spoon sugar. Rub in one teaspoon lard and add enough water to make this batter. Then add one or two eggs. Beat well and fry on hot griddle. This makes enough for two, and they are certainly fine.
