The Broken Circle!

CHAPTER XX.

It happens so often that a great love is lavished in vain. Sir Basil saw nothing of Leah's. He admired her exceedingly, but he never dreamed of loving her. He would have done anything for her; he had the kindly affection of a brother for her; ever since she had stood by the white lilies in the hall, in the spot where his fair young sister had died, she had to him in some measure taken that dead sister's place. He confided everything to her, told her, of all his affairs, sought her advice, was happy in her society, never rested long away from her, thought of her with continual kindly affection; but of love he never dreamed.

The duchess, who had said to herself that she would not interfere, did just this one thing—she told Sir Basil of the splendid triumphs that Leah had achieved, and how she had passed through three such reasons as few even of the most brilliant beauties had ever experienced. She told of the offers of marriage made to her, and how she had refused them all.

"Why did she refuse them?" he asked.

The duchess meant to do a kindly action when she answered:

"She has ideas that are peculiar for

Anaemia

Thin, watery blood is no more nourishing than thin, watery milk—skim milk.

But you can soon enrich thin blood, overcome the anaemic condition and build up the whole system by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Mrs. F. C. Simmons, 42 Curtis St., Brantford, Ont., writes:

"For about eight years I suffered from anaemia. My circulation was poor, my gums and lips were pale, and my hands and feet were always cold. I was nervous and unable to sleep well. I had frequent headaches, seemed restless and easily worried or irritated. There was a buzzing sound in my ears. Indigestion was also one of my complaints, and I often was attacked by weak spells. I went to a doctor, who told me I was anaemic, but as I did not get any better I decided to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after the first box I felt brighter and my headaches completely disappeared. I continued using the Nerve Food for quite a while. I am quite well now, and cheerfully and gratefully recommend Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to people suffering as I did before I used this splendid medicine."

her. Leah's face was deadly pale in the glowing sunlight.

"The girl's heart is sick," thought the kindly woman, "and in all the wide world no one knows the secret but me. What can I do for her?"

Suddenly her face brightened. She rose from her seat and went over to Leah. The pale face was half hidden by the climbing roses that came in at the window.

"I have been thinking, Leah," she said, "that it seems a pity to break up this pleasant party here. I like Lady Maude, and pretty May is a very sweet girl. I do not care about the military element, but I shall ask Lady Maude and May to go with us. That will be very pleasant; will it not?"

"Yes," replied Leah, coldly. The pain at her heart was so bitter, so keen that it was with difficulty she answered at all.

"And I have been thinking," continued the duchess, "that, as Sir Basil and your uncle seem so warmly attached to each other, it would be a great pity to part them, above all just now, when Sir Basil is evidently recovering health and spirits. The duke likes him very much, and I thought of asking him to go to Dene with us. He will find plenty shooting and fishing there. We are sure to have some pleasant shooting-parties in September."

Was it a dazzling burst of sunlight that brightened Leah's fair face and laughed in her expressive face? She turned with a quick, graceful gesture, and stooping, kissed the white jewelled hands of the kindly woman who had read so well her heart's desire. She spoke no word, and the duchess did not notice her emotion.

"What do you think of it, Leah?" she asked, when she perceived that the sudden thrill of pleasure had passed.

"I think," she replied, slowly, "that he will be very pleased."

"Do you?" said the duchess, trying to speak carelessly, while her heart ached for the girl. "Then I will ask him to-day."

She saw that the kindest thing she could do was to leave Leah alone. The girl trembled, and the hands that sought the crimson roses shook.

"I have some letters to write, Leah," said the duchess. "I think I will finish them before luncheon."

Leah did not even hear her. The duchess raised her hands and eyes as she went away.

"I thought I was in love when I was a girl," she said; "but that was child's play to this. I have always said a great love is a terrible thing, and so it is."

She would have been more sure of it still had she seen Leah when she knew herself to be alone. She bowed her head, while tears fell like rain-drops upon the crimson roses; and from the girl's trembling lips came the murmured words of a prayer. She thanked Heaven. Heaven had sent Sir Basil; and now he was not to be taken out of her life suddenly, but they were to be together the whole of the happy bright autumn. And, for the time, self-sacrificing Hettie, of whom Leah had heard nothing since they parted, was forgotten in this new happiness.

"Not Worth a Rap."

If we toss something contemptuously aside, or discard an idea with the exclamation, "It isn't worth a rap," we mean that we do not place any value on it. The term originated in Ireland in the early part of the 18th century. Coins at that time were scarce and the government issued the "rap," a base half-penny, intrinsically worth only half a farthing. People continually ridiculed the "rap," and gradually came to compare everything of little value to that tiny coin. In Switzerland, at one time, there was a coin current called a "rappe," worth about one-seventh of 1 cent.
