TOUCHING RECOLLECTIONS.

In another letter, dated Wallaceburg, Feb. 25, 1885, the doctor said:
I got a new suit, when I was in Chatham, when I bought a short coat and tight pants. I have just come home from Sunday school, and am sitting at the stand in the window where once your precious form rested, which has ever since given it a charm. Sometimes I try to imagine you are with me, but alas!

A second letter to Miss Obey at Says:

Dear Friend Gokey.—It seems so unnatural to call you Kate that I must use that familiar old expression. I always feel so sorry for having tread you as I did, but I console myself by saying "she is as true as ever" and hope you will guard against the strategies of man.

THE EVIDENCE.

The first witness was the plaintiff. Miss Gokey is a tall brunette with regular features and generally attractive. She wore a fur boa and muff and a white veil.

Mr. Bigelow asked: "When did you first meet the defendant?"

"It was in 1880 at Dobie Bros'. millinery store at Wallaceburg."

"When did he promise marriage?"

"In 1882, and it was to be fulfilled in a year."

"Did you leave Toronto?"
"Yes, and went to Montreal. It was there I received some of the letters."

The witness told of a certain visit of the doctor, and Mr. Bigelow asked: "What was the general tone of the conversation?"

The witness—"At first aboutour acquaintances, and then he came over and sat on the sofe with me."

"What did he talk of then?"
"Uve. After awhile he got on his knees and said: 'God is my witness, and I promise attention?"

"Yes, he called often."
"What was the character of his visits?"
"Just to spend the evening and the con-friend. He was deceiving one of us." "Did he make love then?"

"He got on his knees and promised to be true."
"Has he been true?"
"No."
"Has he ever married you?"
"No, hardly. During July he told me he would never marry any one."
Mr. Meredith commenced a vigorous cross-examination and brought out some important points for the defense. He asked:

asked:
"What made you jealous of this woman?"
SHE WAS NOT JEALOUS.
The witness—"It wasn't jealousy, but I was afraid she would harm the dector."
"Who was the woman?"

"Yes; I guess she is."

"Didn't you try to torment him since ou started this action?"
"No."
