GURL DISAPPEARS IN LONDON.

Woodstock Express: A prominent Ingersoll man is in a quandary to know what has become of his 15-year-old adopted daughter. She left on Friday last in company with her foster father for London. They were to part there. he returning home and she proceeding on a visit to friends in Exeter. When he arrived home in Ingersoll he received word that the Exeter people had received a telegram signed by him. saying that his daughter would not arrive there until Tuesday or Wednesday. He declared that he sent no telegram to Exeter, and is at a perfect loss to know where his adopted daughter is, or who counterfeited his signature. He notified the London police, and after some inquiry they found that the girl had stated to some Lon-don friends that she was going over to call on some people in the city with whom she was acquainted. Further inquiry from the people she was going visit shows that they do not reside in London now, but removed to Woodstock only on Friday themselves. They are in Woodstock now, and when seen about the affair Monday morning said that while they know the girl saw nothing of her before leaving London. The foster parents are very anxious about the safety of the girl, because of her extreme youth. It is hoped, though, that she has only de-cided to remain in London for a couple of days visiting friends, and that she will turn up in Exeter tomorrow or Wednesday all safe and sound.

Where to Get Shoe Bargains

Boots and Shoes are being sold at the Bargain Shoe Store, 143 Dundas street, at less than manufacturers' prices. If you will require any new footwear this fall or winter, it will certainly pay you to purchase at that establishment now. The price you would have to pay for one pair of shoes at other stores would very near-ly buy two such pairs at the Bargain Shoe Store. We are advised that while the present stock lasts, boots and shoes will be sold at lower prices than ever known in London before for such goods. It is not old, shelf-worn stock one is getting when purchases are made at that store, but new, up-to-date, reliable footwear. We would advise our readers to not let this opportunity pass. A good supply of superior footwear may be procured at the Bargain Shoe Store now for a very small outlay. The proprietor, F. A. Brown, is selling at extremely low prices in order to make a complete clearance before moving into his new shop adjoining Strong's Drug

THE ROMANCE OF GIBSON'S MODEL

Arthur Stringer, London's Brilliant Son, Weds the Famous Beauty.

The Poet's Appreciation of Jobyna Howland's Marvelous Laveliness-A Quiet Marriage-Metropolitan Recognition of the Groom's Worth.

Under the caption "The Romance of Real Gibson Girl, who Fell in Love with a Real Poet," the Chicago-American prints an account of a marriage that it absorbingly interesting to Londoners, that of Mr. Arthur J. Stringer, of South London, and Miss Jobyna Howland, the famous "Gibson Girl." Mr. Stringer has won favor of Stringer, of No. 64 Elmwood avenue. He was educated at the public schools and Collegiate Institute here, Toronto University, and Oxford. He has taken no degrees, but sought always to prepare himself more thoroughly for the career he had chosen, and in which he has been so successful. The article in the American is accompanied by full-page illustrations of the groom and his beautiful bride:

"Lips that curve deliciously, vividly carmine, hiding Hogarth's fourfold line of beauty; challenging, imperious, tender: eyes that are tawny, shadowy. tigerish, one minute the eyes of Artemis of the Arcadians, and the next those of the brooding Juno of the Romans, sometimes languorously alert, sometimes indolently museful, quiescently sorrowful, wet opalescent always, with dormant and dangerous fires; hair that is golden, heavy, lux-uriant, like that of Homer's Helen; a neck like the daughter of Diana, supple, full-throated, tower-like; brow rather low and broad, not unlike the Venice of Milo, with the coldness of the classic profile, endeared and humanized by a womanish dimple; tall, in tmuth, tall as a daughter of the gods, tail enough to have delighted one of those cold Greeks who left their broken dreams of beauty in the Par-

MACHINE TYPE SETTERS Said To be Hard on Operators

The work of a typesetter in a modern printing office is very exacting, particularly if he runs a linotype or typesetting machine. It requires the closest attention and rapid and sympathetic action of both; brain and hand. This machine works much like a typewriter. Such workers fed on ordinary food give up because of nervous prostration, some in a short time, and some are able to stand it longer.

One of these workers says: "I have been at the linotype three years. It has made a great change in my once robust health. About three months ago, after long expecting it, I completely collapsed from indigestion and extreme nervousness. The daily physic I had not dared to omit for years, now and then, refused relief and a physician was consulted.

"'Change of occupation and diet." read the prescription; 'advise eating Grape-Nuts food twice daily.' I had often set up the advertisements of the Postum Cereal Company, but somehow printers are apt to think advertisements are not intended for them to make use of. I could not well change my occupation, but did change my

"Since then have used Grape-Nuts, both at breakfast and supper, daily. The results are truly remarkable. The first perceptible change was in matter of digestion. It has been six weeks since I have had to swallow an aperient of any kind. At the beginning of my experiment I weighed 124 pounds; last evening I tipped the beam at 157½.

"My nerves, which were completely shattered three months ago, are now strong and steady, and I do not tire eastly, though I go to bed an hour later on an average than formerly, and have increased my capacity at the machine fully two columns of type a day. I fully two columns of type a day. I am convinced that Grape-Nuts food is the food for persons of sedentary occupation. especially for those who work with brain in lieu of brawn." Charles H. Eckhard, 177 N. Chambers, street, Galesburg, III.

Fit-Reform and Its Mission.

Fit-Reform was produced to fill three wants.

First-To give tailor-made clothing at ready-made cost. Second-To give tailor-made style and fit without tailormade delay.

Third-To do away with tailor-made guess work as to how a piece of cloth will look when made up.

Fit-Reform is not merely a name. Its name is useful only to distinguish it from make-shift clothing.

Fit-Reform led the way to good clothing ready made. It still leads where other branded clothing is unsettled and uncertain, following an idea without the experience to carry it out. Fit-Reform has passed through the primary grades and stands at the head of the ranks of the best.

the goddess of love as of the muse, thenon of the Athenian Acropolis; tem-He is the oldest son of Mr. Hugh A. pestuous, subdued, affectionate, tyrannical, loving, incongruous, able-the last strange gift of the gods —a lovely woman."—Arthur J. String-er's appreciation of Jobyna Howland. Charles Dana Gibson is looking for another favorite model, and despairs of finding her. She who for years held that position will pose for him no more, and for a very good reason. Jobyna Howland has married and will pose only as the inspirer of the poems and stories of her husband, the young Canadian poet and novelist, Arthur Stringer, who a year ago lauded the charms of his love in the paragraph just quoted. It was on October 2 that the wedding of the model and the poet took place at the Little Church Around the Corner. It was an evening wedding. The sun was just setting behind the cedars on the parsonage lawn. The tall, handsome young woman who threaded her way between the cedar to the chapel doors might have been recognized by any one of scores that were passing in haste to join the throng on Broadway.

The tall figure, the sloping shoulders,

the haughty poise of the head, the clear, coid features, the arched lifted eyebrows, the proudly curving were curiously familiar. One had seen them hundreds of times in the Gibson groups. The girl was always standing, always tossing her head back a bit, always smiling with the superciliousness of a patrician. There was never a Gibson group without her, and never a Gibson group in which she was not the most conspicuous figure. She was known to lovers as "Gibson's best," to frequenters of the artist's studio as "Gibson's favorite model." The man who gave her his arm as she threaded her way through cedars to the door of that church of romance was taller than she and handsome. In the inner circle of the literati of New York he was as familiar a figure as was his companion's in the studio. To readers he was known as the author of "The Loom of Destiny," the collection of studies of child life, published by G. P. Putnam's Sons; of the collection of verse "Watches at Twillight," and of vagrant poems and stories in Hurper's and other magazines. He was known to Shakespearian scholars as the iconoclast who claimed, and wrote learnedly in support of his claim, that Cordella and the jester of "King Lear" were one and the same. Three friends followed them into the chapel and heard Dr. George G. Houghton read the marriage service. When it was over they went to the studio appartment, No. 146 Fifth avenue, to offer congratulations and see Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Stringer installed In their new home.

Destiny's strong fingers draw many a pair together from opposite parts of world. Three years ago Jobyna Howland was a High School girl at Denver, Col. Her world was tounded by a range of the Rocky Mountains on one side and the far-stretching eastward prairies of Colorado on the other. At the same time Arthur Stringer was a student at Oxford. He knew High street and Addison's Walk as well as do all students. His early recollections were of his birthplace in that land on our northern border that Kipling calls "Our Lady of the Snows." He had boundless ambitions, too, and no thought of love. He was center scrimmage of the Oxford football team, and despite that fact distinguished himself in Greek. So was Arthur Stringer's world constituted. It was bigger than that of the Denver

High School girl. And the two worlds were far apart. The fortunes of Miss Howland's father dwindled. The habitat of the high school girl changed from a fine house on Capitol Hill to that indefinite, unfashionable quarter one-time friends describe as "further down-town" and then forget. True, the cottage was neat and rose-vined, but It was a cottage nevertheless, and the quarters were cramped for Jobyna Howland. She pined and fretted be cause she was "a burden to papa." She resolved to go to New York to "seek her fortune." She talked with theatrical managers. She called at studios. But always there was one objection. Spoken or unvoiced it was the same: "You are too tall." The girl wept because of that statuesque height of six feet. She wore ultra common-sense, low heeled shoes. But the objection remained until she called on Charles Dana Giloson. Every one knows that the artist's ideal is a tall woman. To him Miss Howland was a divinity of models. Thereafter prosperity smiled upon the statuesque young woman from the West. She was James K. Hackett's leading woman for a season. Now she holds the same position in "Miss Print," Miss Dressler's new play. She made many friends in the literary and artistic set. Among them were Captain and Mrs.

Michael Gifford White. Arthur Stringer finished his course at Oxford. He determined that literature should be his profession. He returned to his home in Canada for a brief vacation. He engaged in literary work in Chicago, later in New York. He soon, by right of place, found himself a part of the literary and artistic chrole of New York. He formed, with other acquaintances, a formal calling association with Captain and Mrs. Michael Gifford White. During an evening call at their apartment on Washington Square, he met Miss Howland. A circle of destiny was completed.
