Vera's Love Affair

"Like what?"
"Like any other fellow's sister, not mine." This is an artful touch, but Lady Riverdale strengthens herself to receive the shock, and continues to look admiringly.
"Is it honorable of you to induce a girl to marry you on seven hundred a year?"
"Why, you are always admonishing me to ask this girl and that, to share that handsome fortune."
"Not penniless girls."
"I couldn't be happy with any girl but Griselda, not if she was the golden-legged Miss Klimanegg herself. I tell you, I regard my former ravings as monstrous. I feel that with Griselda seven hundred a year will mean affluence."
"Perhaps it would be wise to go in to it before coming to such an extraordinary conclusion," says she coldly.
"I know what you mean by that," says he with a good-natured, but rather impatient laugh, "the gas bill, the coal bill, the butcher's bill—all the bills."
"Oh, go on!" slowly, "the wine bill, the cigar bill, the..."
"If you saw Griselda, you'd understand at once that she would be an excellent substitute for such dull things as wine and cigars," says Mr. Peyton with enthusiasm. His sister turns her pale but contemptuous eyes on him.
"Really, Tom, one would think you were 14 instead of 30," she says with ineffable disdain.
It seems to her that it is indeed mere waste of time to argue any further with a person so far gone in folly as this one dearly beloved brother of hers, and taking up the brush she professes to ignore his presence by giving all her attention to the deepening of the sunset that already is far rosier—yet, let us be truthful at all risks—far more vermilion than nature ever intended.
When the silence that follows upon this speech has become too marked to be pleasant, Mr. Peyton breaks in.
"Look here," he begins, using his favorite form of address, "if you won't help me to marry her, I'll induce her to run away with me, and you won't like that. You will like it so little that I give you warning of it, because I leave her to wear her heart out in that dung-heap, more than I have pluck for."
"You have a great deal of pluck, nevertheless," says she, still trying to be indifferent and still to over-observe the luckless landscape.
"Not enough to see the girl I love fretting herself to addressings day after day. You don't like to see my sister-in-law who has defied the usual laws of society, but I warn you that I shall get her out of her confinement by any means, as soon as ever I can."
"He has risen and is looking with earnest, troubled eyes at his sister, who, however, refuses to meet it or even to look at her.
"I may not have to receive her at all. I may not acknowledge her," says she coolly, a trifle angered by her, and though indeed her heart is beginning to faint within her.
"Oh, if it comes to that, if you really mean what you say, I'll offer you a word of advice. I think you might proceed to unearth his hat from the chair on which he had been seated. I dare say we—Griselda and I—will be able to manage very well without you."
"Still, with that stiff air about him that is somehow so unadvised, you his kindly detestable countenance, he moves toward the door with a determination to depart now for ever that terrifies Lady Riverdale.
"What on earth is it you want me to do?" cries she, blinging down the deservative brush and leaning to offer you a word of advice. Come back, Tom, come back at once! What do you mean, by treating me in this way, when you you, you know I did 14,000 in 1882, 14,475 in 1883 and 14,164,638,123 in 1884."
"Is that the truth now?" asks he, looking back with his fingers on the handle of the door.
"I have I not said it? Sit down again and let us talk things over. Of course, I can't deny that I am sorry you have selected a girl who, however desirable, cannot help you to more of the world's goods than you already possess, but you surely need not go off like a skyrocket just because I offer you a word of advice. I think you might wait and hear what a sensible woman has got to say before putting your hat in that abominably aggressive fashion, and—what is it I am to do, Tom?"
"If you will only give us a helping hand," says she, "I wouldn't indeed, if I wasn't sure you would love her when you see her. She is the sweetest girl I assure you, the very sweetest I ever."
"Yes, yes, I know," protests poor Lady Riverdale, who has endured a great deal, and is conscious of the fact that endurance, however stout, can fail.
"But what I meant to say is, that I shouldn't have dreamed of soliciting your assistance, but that I am sure I assure you, the very sweetest I ever."
"I'm sure of it, sure," protests poor Lady Riverdale, who has endured a great deal, and is conscious of the fact that endurance, however stout, can fail.

"don't be angry again, Tom, but I confess I should like to see her first."
"Well, you couldn't," says he hastily.
"But why not? I hear that that terrible old man has Wednesdays, when all the world is permitted to see his house and grounds for so much a head."
"Even that wouldn't help you to see Griselda. On no account try," says Mr. Peyton, seriously alarmed at the idea of his sister perambulating the grounds all coming upon him in the way of the ghostly old rabbit-skin cap. "You have no idea of the sort of man my dear Dyralt is a regular fox, my dear girl—a modern Machiavelli. He'd know at once at the very glimpse of you, and he is also on the lookout for some secret loophole of his, what it was had come for. He would see it was a matter of mere pleasure. And once he found that out—Take my advice, my dear girl, don't enter his gates as you value your life."
"Nonsense, Tom. What folly! One would think we were living in the dark ages. He couldn't murder me, he has a reputation. That's all you know about it. He has the reputation of 'having a temper so uncontrollable that it would lead him to any excesses if provoked. Of course, I know he would not murder you deliberately in cold blood, but he keeps a breed of dogs that once let loose, would terrify a Hercules. A breed that—" puts in Lady Riverdale, nervously.
"I don't exactly know what breeds, but rather impatiently, "but only that they hold of anything they never let go. They caught hold of you," plaintively, "I should never forgive myself. He regards me with extreme anxiety. So painfully solicitous indeed does he appear for her safety, that suspicion is awakened in the mind of Lady Riverdale. What secret dark and deep underlies all this assumption of sensibility? In what mysterious scrape was this unhappy boy fallen?"
"Very good. I will take your word for her—Miss Dyralt," she says, while all the time a tiny plan is formulating in her mind, a plan in which fear of those terrible dogs at Greycourt—bred unknown—has no part at all.

AND INSURE THE REGULAR AND HEALTHFUL ACTION OF THE BOWELS BY USING DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

The bile is Nature's cathartic, so long as the liver filters the bile from the blood and passes it into the intestines, the bowels will be regular. They rid the system of accumulated poisons, thoroughly cleanse the system and improve the organs of digestion and excretion.

FOR INFLAMMATION OF THE EYES.—This is the most common ailment which Parmentier's Vegetable Pills possess, besides regulating the digestive organs, besides being effective in reducing inflammation of the eyes. It has called forth many letters of recommendation from those who were troubled with this complaint, and found a cure in the pills. They affect the nerve centers and the blood in a surprisingly active way, and the result is almost immediately seen.

Mutsuhiro, The Wizard of Japan

Emperor's Name Will Live On Roll of World's Mighty.

REGENERATION WAS HIS WORK

When that Sixteen He Began the Modernization of His People—Results of Thirty Years.

London, Feb. 18.—Life must seem like a dream to Mutsuhiro, the emperor's magician of Japan, the man of the hour in the Far East today, as he looks back to the time when he came to power. As long as Japan has a place in the world his name must live on the roll of the world's great men.

It was not given to many of the great world figures who made history and founded empires to sow the seeds and watch them grow. In the time of England, through war and revolution, now suffering from oppression and long night of feudalism into the freedom of the world, that to one man in the world it has been given to find a nation bound and to set it free, to ascend a feudal throne and to base it firm upon the people's will.

Mutsuhiro has brought Japan to Europe. It is almost as if he had, by a stroke of his magic, taken the Conqueror into the England of today. Half a thousand years seem to have slipped by forgotten in the generation which Mutsuhiro has reigned.

CHANGES IN THIRTY YEARS.

Time and history seem both to be playing tricks when we think of the rise of Japan, the thing which, in the centuries old are only thirty years, and almost on the same page we find prime ministers and feudal lords. Here are men, and men not old, who remember when for an Englishman to set foot in Japan was a perilous thing, when Japan was Europe as a closed book, which none had dared to open. Then, across the vast distance, came rumbles of a storm, the dim message of a mighty change, and Europe knew that Mutsuhiro, a young man in an old country, the youngest, perhaps, of all the rulers in the world, had broken down the power of centuries, swept aside all but a thousand years of custom, and laid the foundations for a new Japan.

It was the work, as it were, of a night. In a short was the Shogun, the ancient ruler of Japan, for 700 years, was overthrown, and the dynasty which through all the centuries had ruled Japan in name now ruled in fact. That was in 1868, when Mutsuhiro was 16, and it seems an incredible thing outside a novel that a youth in his teens should lead a revolution in Egypt into the promised land. Yet all that is modern and powerful in Japan has come into being since the Emperor was 16, and in a short life he has made up all the strange change which has made Japan the hope of the east-to-day.

SACRIFICE MADE BY NOBLES.

Even now there are times when Japan looks more like a picture in a fairy book than a country on the map. At the Emperor's garden party gray veterans scrape up the soil where his chair has rested and carry it away, and if the Emperor has taken a piece

OLD CUSTOMS ARE REVERENCED.
"Among all the innovations of the era," a great authority on Japan has told us, "the one that a Japanese could not do without will be the new fashion of dressing the hair. He abandoned the queue irrevocably; but for the rest he clung to his old life. During hours of duty he wore a fine uniform, shaped and decorated in foreign style, but as soon as he stepped out of office hours he reverted to his own comfortable and picturesque costume. Handsome houses were built and furnished according to western models, but each had an annex where alcoves, verandas, matted floors and paper sliding doors retained the old traditional duty. Breakfast, beer, grape wine, knives and forks, came into use on occasions. Hair bows and chopsticks held their place as of old."
Japan had grown old in the old paths—and now, 25 years after, there are those who treat their hair in the old way. But parliaments and constitutions are wonderful things, and the new Japan has taken her place in the front line of nations. The attempt to set up a parliament without parties failed, and we saw the other day that the Japanese Parliament, the child of the political genius of Asia, had dared to rebuke the Emperor, who brought it into being. Men who ruled Japan before Mutsuhiro were born in humble lives today. Sons of feudal lords, whose ancestors lived in great castles and great armies, and ruled great territories, are servants of shopkeepers and clerks now. Even the pensions, which were to have gone on forever, were bought up by the state in its transforming days, and liberty, equality and fraternity have been cut down in vivid letters across the living Japan.
Thirty-five short years, and today men tremble to think what 25 short hours may bring for this magical land of the modern world.

MORAL—BE SQUARE.

It was when the Boer war had brought depression in London financial circles three years ago that Wright's doom was sealed. One of his Australian mining companies was Lake View Consols, a property that he originally bought for about $1,000, was capitalized for more than $1,000,000 in shares which were made scarce by the state. He sold his shares for $100,000. He had fallen to one-third of their former high price when Wright, in 1900, entered the market to stem the decline by purchasing them in the market through the London and Globe Finance Corporation. This collapsed under the strain, carrying down with it the similarly jangled and overworked affiliated companies and hurrying thirteen stock exchange firms in the ruins. Then followed the crash.
