

Mickey, the Boy Orator, demonstrated his right to be called a worthy scion of the land of Boyle O'Roche. Mike's rendition was as follows:—I smell a rat; I see him brewing in the air; if he does not draw in his horns, I'll nip him in the bud.

ULULATUS.

H—l—n's tongue got burned singing "There'll be a hot time".

"He who talks but runs away
May live to talk another day".
is the chorus of M—r—in and M—l—s.

Always on time—A watch case.

Up to date—The calendar.

On a rope—The college bell.

Rung up—A ladder.

On the hog—Every thing.

Fatty—Have you seen Shea?

Jimmy—What Shea?

Fatty—Why Crochet.

Jimmy—Oh! say nit, it's more tidy.

Pat—(seeing opera glasses for the first time)—What do they use those things for?

Dick—They bring you right up close to them.

Pat.—Well heavens! those two down there have been listening to us talk all evening.

Tom C—l—y got the better of an electric car conductor the other day. Tom tells the story himself: "Because I hadn't my fare the bloke yelled at me to get off and walk. Did I do it? Not much. I got off all right, but I didn't walk. I sat right down on the granolithic pavement. I guess I made a fool of him before the passengers".

Todd—Poor MacG—has caught an awful cold.

Bert.—Knowing how cold Mac can be when he wishes replied. Oh! I guess he caught it while setting with himself.

T—r—ny.—So you think M—s father and mother think a deal of you?

Jim.—Oh! yes, I am sure of it, they come in and sit in the parlor all the time I am there.

Frank.—What's the latest going on around here?

Dick.—Oh the new roof on the seminary.

Bill.—Say Joe did you hear that Sousa was drowned yesterday?

Joe.—No. How did it happen.

Bill.—Oh! he was playing "On the Banks of the Wabash," and fell in.

Teacher.—Say Dennie, you should make a good hockey player.

Dennie.—How's that?

Teacher.—Because you are quite familiar with the "Puck."

A distinguished professor of unspeakable languages, while showing visitors around pointed to the bell remarking "that is the eye opener."

Reports are prevalent that a recent meeting of the Debating Club was packed. If this be the case it was due to sim ultaneous combustion.

In the cold damp regions of the Klondike bells are not used they ring their clothes up there.