The wrongs and privations of our mad poet who has just emerged from a stygian darkness of a month's duration have found expression in the following composition:

Light in the darkness, student, gas is at hand,
See through the college halls fair Vesta's land.
Drear was the darkness, student, now its quite
o'er.

Safe within the lighted halls, bark your nose
no more.

Chorus - Gas in the halls, student, gas in the halls.

Hed not the holidays but lustily roar.

Safe in the lightness, student, stumble around
no more.

Leave those poor old coal oil lamps, and let
the gas roar.

Trust in the boiler, student, it will not fail.

Deeper the snowdrifts are and fiercer the gale;
Hed not the stormy winds, though loudly
they roar;

Our guardian Angel's got up steam, so now
he'll give us more.

Gas in the halls, etc.

Hot comes the water, student, thankful we
cry;

Cold and Shivers disappearing, shaving is
nigh;

Safe in the bathroom, student, sing evermore,
La la la la la li ce hoo, cold water's
o'er.

Gas in the halls, etc.

The Oz comes once more in all its gay and gorgeous plumage; the article which strikes us as being excellent is "Cowper in the Task."

We are pleased to have placed on our exchange list the Gazette, published by the scholars of the Brampton High School.

One of our new exchanges is the Business,
from Peterborough, a monthly journal devoted to the interests of practical education and finance.

To our "Printer's Devil:" Go tell your master to take good care that I be not mistaken for n, because that would be most unatural
and injurious."

My busy days have now begun,
I hardly rest a minute;

But when School dinner soup is served
As usual, I'm not in it.

Again the Kansas Central Luminaire comes to hand. It contains a great fund of interesting and instructive articles, which no doubt indicates the great interest taken by the students in the welfare of their paper.

A paper which we have not been in receipt of till very recently, emanates from the sanctum of Woodstock College. Perhaps the fault lies here. We think "distance lends enchantment to the view," and always try to get our exchanges from the utmost limit.
While we should cultivate this acquaintance with those who are far away, we should at the same time cultivate even more assiduously a nearer connection and establish a closer bond of union between the colleges of our own land. We therefore hope that from this time forth we may be in receipt of a regular, continuous stream of journals, not having an intermittant pause.

"But whose numbers with increase of ages
grow,
As stream's roll down, enlarging as they flow."
