BLACK THROATED BLUE WARBLER, Dendroica caerulescens. Where the preceding one is found, this one may also be looked for. They frequent bushy, open woods and are mostly seen in the branches of medium sized trees. Its best song is: Dill-dill dill-dreé, rapid, ascending. When busy feeding or later in summer it abbreviates this into, Re-dereé-di, Tsree tsree tsree, or even a shrill, whistle-like, Trree.

MAGNOLIA WARBLER, Dendroica maculosa. This handsome black and yellow warbler has quite a repertoire of lays and ditties, which all however do not amount to much. Its best performance is a loud, impulsive, Iree deree di. At other times it sings like the Chestnut-sided warbler: Peary, peary pee a; then again monotonously: Tsee, tsee, tsee, etc., or it utters a rather melodious disyllable Tsee-wit, tsee-wit.

BLACKBURNIAN WARBLER, Dendroica blackburniæ. This winged gem of black, white and deep orange sings little and then very poorly, a faint. hesitating, Dee dee dee, in one pitch of tone, or even only: De de de.

PINE WARBLER, Dendroica vigorsii. True to its name, this warbler lives only in pine-woods or in single pines amongst deciduous trees. Its color is dull olive and the song exactly like that of the Chipping Sparrow; it cannot well be reproduced by syllables.

CANADIAN WARBLER, Wilsonia canadensis. This warbler is of a somewhat pensive and retiring disposition. It prefers swampy and bushy places. The breast is bright yellow, with a neck-lace of black spots, back bluish gray. The only song I have heard sounds like a faint imitation of the Maryland Yellow throat, a subdued, halting: Witchety, witchety. When alarmed in their quiet haunts they utter a sharp tsip or tsink.

BLACKPOLL WARBLER, Dendroica striata. Black and white, with a black crown, larger than most warblers, Its song is a very insignificant dry: De de de, uttered very leisurely.

NASHVILLE WARBLER. Helminthophila ruficapilla. A bright yellow warbler, bluish gray on top. The song is variable. Some give it: Wee-see, wee-see, wit-a-wit-wit; others: Ke-tse, ke-tse, ke-tse, chip-ee-chip-ee-chip. Rather loud and lively.
