Sketch of an English Catholic Bishop in the Olden Time.

From Willis's English Cathedrals.

Thomas Beckington, one of the Canons, was elected Bishop of Bath and Wells in 1448. Of the manner in which this exemplary Bishop employed great part of his time, and the vast revenues of his See, he has left splendid evidence, and so long as one stone of his Cathedral remains, so long must his memory, his taste and his liberality, be held in veneration. It has been happily conjectured that he imbibed his love for, and perhaps skill in, architecture, from his first patron William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester, from whom Bishop Waynflete is known to have acquired his knowledge of that science. Beckington's munificence was scarcely inferior to that of either of those celebrated personages. He repaired and England.

beautified all the Episcopal houses in his Diocess. He also erected a considerable part of the cloisters of the Cathedral of Wells, and built and endowed a Chantry Chapel on the southern side of the choir; the whole of the College of the Vicars choral was rebuilt at his expense by his executors. tention was not confined to the mere appendages of his Cathedral. Amongst other benefactions to the City of Wells, . he built "the new work," a row of houses on the northern side of the market place, and two large gate houses on the eastern end; he also granted permission to the inhabitants of the city to have a conduit near the cross, to be sup plied by pipes from St. Andrews well, within the precincts of the palace, 'It is in Well's,' says SirHarrisNicolas, in his life of this Bishop, 'that the lover of the arts, and the admirer of the zeal and disinterestedness of the prelates of the middle ages will be most impressed with respect for Bishop Beekington; but whilst viewing the effects of his munificance, will be able to refrain from asking himself, why it is that the most opulent successors of those great men have so rarely imitated them ?-Will his respect for the established order of things be sufficient to repress the reflection, that with nearly the same revenues, the modern clergy seldom indeed beautify or repair Cathedrals,
