

The one vital principle of homeopathy is expressed in the formula "Similia Similibus Curantur," and while the current practice may vary somewhat among individuals, in the main homœopaths are to-day the world over practicing Homœopathy and to a man will respond to a test of belief in the law. Upon what common ground, except the abuse of Homœopathy, does the regular school stand? How many regulars will agree about the prevention, cause or cure of the simplest disease! Only a few weeks ago one of the foremost physicians in their school in Europe declared that their treatment had never succeeded in aborting a disease when it had become established. Then why talk about the "pretentions" of other schools?—Dr. J. H. Mackay.
