

over the undying superior, the Dhurram Rajah or Sama, or his mortal vessel, the Deb Rajah or immediate ruler of Bootan.

The Booteas are notoriously an unwarlike race, and, from the little which I have seen of their demeanour towards us, I am inclined to think that they have less of the overweening arrogance of the demi-barbarian than might be expected from their political and moral situation. A rupture with this state will only be formidable as indicating that it has the countenance of another and greater power behind it.
