Eugene Brosseau to Go After the Big Ones

Montreal, June 5.—That Eugene Brosseau, former amateur welterweight champion of Canada, and now one of the best in the middleweight professional ranks, is making good use of the money earned during his season as a professional, is shown by the purchase of a farm on the south side of the river.
Brosseau has fought six professional fights for the Olympic Club, and has earned over $8000. His guarantees have all been large, and in several of the bouts fought by him Brosseau has taken a percentage of the total gate receipts, which amounted to more than the guarantee.
Brosseau has a brother-in-law who owns a farm in Montreal South, and he will look after the farm purchased by Brosseau. The former amateur champion has decided to put in a good deal of time working on the farm in an effort to harden his hands. His hands have given him a great deal of trouble, and the local fighter realizes that this difficulty must be gotten over before he can go to the top of his class.
Brosseau will not fight any more until June 24, on which date he is willing to fight any man, British or Young, American, Brosseau is credited with the statement that he is tired of fighting men of the middleweight class, and he wants to go after the best of them. Brosseau has earned the decision in all of his local bouts, and has defeated the majority of the Canadian fighters in his class. He first fought in the city championship at the M.A.A.A. four years ago, and since that time has twice earned the international title. He is fast and clever at defensive boxing, and packs a good wallop, which was shown more particularly in his amateur victories, as he won the majority of them by the knockout route.
