PLANS ARE DISCUSSED FOR POLICE STATION

Will Be a Fine Place—Citizens Campaign Committee Meetings—Latest Cataract Proposition.

HAMILTON, Ont., Oct. 21.—(Special.)—The markets committee and the police commissioners this evening considered plans for a new $40,000 central police station to be erected just east of the present No. 3 station. It is the intention to remove the police headquarters from City Hall. The station will be built on the site of the old station, and will be occupied by twenty-four male prisoners, and caretaker's quarters. The front of the second floor will be occupied with the offices of the chief magistrate and stenographer, and in the rear there will be cells for eight women. Magistrate Jettis suggested that one of the cells on each side should be specially fitted up for the reception of anybody who was at all decent who was detained on a charge. Chairman Gardner, the magistrate and Jettis, will further consult with the architects Steward and Wittson. Revised plans will be submitted to the council next week. It is probable that an east end station will also be built. The present police court will be retained.

Constipation And Appendicitis

The Letter Usually Caused by the Former, Which, in Turn, Has Its Origin in Intestinal Indigestion. Chronic constipation is a disease which is about as prevalent as dyspepsia and indigestion. Nearly every one suffers from it occasionally, but there are millions of people who are afflicted habitually, and who are accustomed to resort to the use of laxatives and cathartics daily.

It is possible; is it probable that the woman in the dock would put a rope around the neck of an innocent child and strangle it? said Mr. Henderson in addressing the jury on behalf of the prisoner. The evidence against the prisoner was circumstantial. Once a link was broken the chain was useless. The prisoner pleaded not guilty, and according to law was so until her guilt was proved. What would be the motive for the deed? He contended that the facts showed no motive. The prisoner was alone, her friends had deserted her, and she was on trial for her life. If they were unable to agree, Mr. Henderson asked the jury to consider the manslaughter or child desertion. The law made no distinction between a man and woman in a charge of murder.

His lordship's charge to the jury was conspicuous for its impartiality, and he laid marked emphasis on the elements of doubt connected with the case. The crown claimed that the infant lost its life at the hands of the prisoner. They were to deal with the evidence submitted. They must judge irrespectively of the previous character of the prisoner, and draw inferences from the circumstantial evidence before them. The prisoner must have the benefit of every reasonable doubt. It is probable that the description of the dead infant was not inconsistent with that of the Authers' child. The hair, eyes, piece of plaster, and box containing the dead body were useful for identification. If the prisoner had murdered the Authers' child, and the body which was found was that of the same child, if she had noticed the plaster in all probability it would have been removed. The duration of life of the dead child agreed with that of the Authers' baby. The boxes, and box containing the description given.

Dealing with the question of motive, his lordship referred to the advertisement of Mrs. Turner. It is evident that she needed money. After she had received the money and adopted the child, there might not have been any reason for wishing that the child should live. The prisoner doubtless knew the incidents of travel between Toronto and Niagara Falls well. It was claimed that after the money had been paid, the burden of the child would be sufficient motive in the hands of an unscrupulous woman.

Answering the damnable risk which the prisoner ran when passing the U.S. customs, his lordship thought this might have arisen from meeting friends on the boat, yet he wondered at the necessity for her making different statements if the box was not a criminal parcel.

"If that woman committed a heartless crime against an innocent babe, pity is not for the woman, but for the babe; but you must not allow a desire to avenge the death of the child lead you to the conclusion that the prisoner before you should be convicted," declared his lordship in conclusion.

Perhaps the most pitiful feature of the trial was the slight of Mrs. Authers, the frail little English woman, as she sat with wide staring eyes listening to the recounting of the killing of the little child which she had scarcely known. As Mr. Blackstock's voice rose in denunciation those eyes were terrible as they gazed full upon the slayer, but as it sank to a near whisper in speaking of the fate of the helpless little creature, they were suffused with tears and her head drooped pitifully.
