THE STORM BREAKS IN RUSSIA

Revolutions do not go backward. The one thing needed to fan the fire in Russia has been supplied by the Czar in dissolving the Duma. The dismissed members refuse to disperse. They have moved to Finland, and are there carrying on an active campaign, which, if successful, will mean the downfall of the Czar and the bureaucracy. This is serious, of course, but if nearly all the Russian people are traitors likewise, the issue is certain. The two forces in collision are really not well matched. The strength of a nation seeking freedom and the strength of a sovereign and a privileged class opposing the people are as a hurricane and a flimsy fence. Once the people perfect some sort of organization and can apply their strength they cannot be misfought. There will be future turmoil as a result of the Czar's act. The worst tell of tumult already, but it is only beginning. It is useless to hope that a reign of terror may be avoided. Of the forces now in collision, one—the government or the people—must be utterly crushed, and when Nicholas summoned a parliament he opened a door which he cannot close, even with a million bayonets.

FOUND DEAD IN HIS BARN

Chas. W. Flewelling, of White Street, Died Suddenly Last Night.

Charles W. Flewelling, of White street, was found dead in his barn on Delhi street last night, and it is believed that apoplexy caused death.

During the time that Mrs. Flewelling was at St. Mary's church, her husband was attending to his home and a friend, which were in his barn on Delhi street. When service was over, Mrs. Flewelling returned home, and, not finding her husband there, thought that perhaps he was at the barn. She went there and found him dead. Immediately she communicated the fact to Rev. Dr. Raymond, who telephoned to Sergeant James Campbell. At first it was thought that the deceased had been kicked by one of the horses, but there were no marks about the body to warrant that supposition. Mr. Flewelling had complained early in the evening of severe pains in the head.

For many years Mr. Flewelling was truckman for W. S. White & Co., and he was 65 years of age. His first wife was a Miss Mary Ella Cronk and his second wife was Miss Amanda May Baker, daughter of James Baker of this city. Mrs. Silas Freese, of 13 Brunswick street, is an adopted daughter.

The funeral will be held tomorrow at 2.30 p. m.

GEMS

Vigorous thought must come from a fresh brain. Don't save your money and starve your mind. Tens of thousands of people fail because they love their ease too much. They are not willing to sacrifice themselves out, to sacrifice comfort.

By proper training the depressing emotions can be practically eliminated from life, and the good emotions rendered permanently dominant.

A man may build a palace, but he can never make of it a home. The spiritual life and love of a woman alone can accomplish this.

If we are contented to unfold the life within according to the pattern given us we shall reach the highest end of which we are capable.

"Keeping alive that spirit of youth," Stevenson used to say, "is the perennial spring of all the mental faculties." Every time you crowd into the memory what you do not expect it to retain you weaken its powers and you lose your authority to command its services.

No life amounts to much until it has a programme—something definite, something particular. Nothing else can take the place of it. Education cannot, talent cannot, genius cannot, hard work cannot. Until there is a definite aim, the energies will run to waste, the ability be squandered. The faculties deteriorate when working without a definite aim.

Business is not only a great civilizer of nations and of peoples, but also the greatest educator and developer of character in the world, for it is a perpetual school. At a great life university, where we do not go to recite and hear lectures for three or four hours a day for a few years, but where we are constantly studying and practicing, almost from the cradle to the grave.—Success Magazine.

THE VOTE MARKET

Mr. Hearst is preparing to buy the governorship of New York, and thereafter to purchase the presidency, if we may believe the Evening Post. The vote market, according to the Post, is somewhat favorable to Mr. Hearst's plans. It is Mr. Hearst's whim to defend Thaw. The Post announces that reputable Democrats would as soon vote for Thaw or Hummel as for Hearst. The inference is that there is an army of Democrats and Republicans who are not reputable. Those, the Post pleasantly remarks, Hearst will proceed to purchase. It says:

"His campaign is distinctly planned to win success by the slum and rowdy vote of both parties. We do not say that only voters of that class would support Hearst, if he should be nominated, but that his chief dependence is plainly upon them."

He knows, and his hired men know, that tens of thousands of reputable Democrats would no more vote for him than they would for Thaw or Hummel. But the plan is to make good the defection of the decent Democrats by the capture of Republicans of the baser sort. The Hearst assault upon the governorship is essentially an attempt to marshal the discontented, the credulous, the purchasable, the raffish of all parties. Hearst firmly believes that they outnumber the sober and honest people of the State, and that they will be attracted to him as naturally as flies to decayed fruit. He plans his campaign accordingly.

"It is disagreeable, but it is a duty, to set forth the truth about it. Self-respecting Democrats of the State should be told with what sort of disgrace their party is threatened. And unless they bestir themselves, they will see the Democracy of New York, which has been upon the fair mountain with Thaw and Cleveland, batten upon the moor of Hearstism."

The N. B. Southern Railway should now undergo a metamorphosis. It has been said that nothing could be done for it while Russell Sage lived. He is dead and there may be no longer any excuse for that famous description of the Southern: "two streaks of rust and a right of way."

Before the next council meeting the aldermen should have a definite report as to the work done by the city dredge and the outlook for finishing what is to be done before next winter.

By the way, wasn't it supposed that St. John was to have Lock Leonard water some time during the next few years? How does the matter stand?

French holders of Russian securities must be getting a trifle nervous. The Russian situation squints at possible repudiation.

Dismissing parliament was over a troublesome business. It does not check revolutions.

Did someone say, "God save the czar?"

Of this interesting question a well informed American reviewer has this to say:—

"Russian journals are discussing the possibility of Germany and Austria intervening by force to rescue the czar. One, at least, reminds him that before this time kings who have ended in foreigner's days on the scaffold. Certainly this is plain talk, and it is to be assumed that it is not without reason. Last year at the time of the conference between Kaiser Wilhelm and the Czar, it was rumored that the former had hinted at armed intervention and that his guest had deprecated it as the worst thing possible for him. Whether this rumor had any basis or not it must persist, or we should not find a Russian journal of good standing publishing the warning which has appeared in the Reich."

"Such ardent intervention is not without precedent in time recalled by many now living. Indeed, the chief beneficiary of that intervention is Franz-Josef, who might not be king of Hungary today had not Russia sent an army to cooperate with him in suppressing the insurrection of 1849-50. The Austrians had been fought to a standstill when the Russian army entered Hungary within three weeks of the declaration of Hungarian independence. The weight of the Russian sword tipped the scales against Hungary. After a brave but losing fight the Hungarian army surrendered to the Russians."

"Franz Josef was then a young man. He had not been chastened by defeat, and was absolutism personified. He made haste to abolish his bloodthirstiness, and Hungarian generals and statesmen were hanged by scores. Franz Josef ruled Hungary with a rod of iron, until he was defeated at Solferino and Magenta. Then as Hungary regarded his difficulties as her opportunity, he granted concessions which were completed after Prussia had humbled him in 1866. If Franz Josef harbors any disposition to aid the czar now, he will probably look at Hungary and get it dare not wait upon I would. He cannot forget, however, that for the aid that the czar's great-grandfather extended to him, Hungary would in all probability have achieved independence in 1849. Neither is Hungary likely to forget. As for Germany, the march of a German army to suppress agrarian revolt in Russia would afford the most searching test possible as to the existence of a German 'public opinion' capable of modifying the absolutist tendencies of the sovereign."

I love the wayside daisies,
So innocent and sweet;
They seem to speak of Jesus,
So humble, pure and meek.
Their happy, smiling faces
As they nod their heads and say:
"Be watchful, kind and sober,
And don't forget to pray."
God gives each one a mission,
Is it great or be it small;
And the mission of the daisies is—
That Jesus loves you all.
