"I'll attend to you in a minute" was the favorite remark of a certain mother to any of her children who were naughty, and the delinquent knew what this usually meant.
One day she sent her four-year-old son to the grocer's for some flour. It was his first errand, and much to his mother's surprise, he returned empty handed.
"Where's the flour?" she asked.
"I didn't get it," replied the youngster. "The man frightened me."
"Nonsense, he won't hurt you," admonished the parent, sternly. "Go back at once and get the flour." But again the boy came back without it and this time his eyes were full of tears.
"What's the matter?" asked the mother, anxiously.
"Boo-hoo-o-o" wailed the child. "I'm afraid of the man. Every time I went in he said, 'All right, sonny, I'll attend to you in a minute.'"
