"THE KERRY GOW' AT NICKEL TOWORROW

Story of Great Irish Drama In Three Reels - Better Than "Colleen Bawn"

Patrick Drew, without his children's nowledge, mortgages his farm to educate his son. Five years later, we find Drew his son. Five years later, we find Drew has been unable to lift the mortgage and knows not which way to turn for relief. Valentine Hay, a land agent, in love with Drew's daughter, Nora, believes he can win the farmer's daughter through the father; and to make his course clear he plans to eliminate Nora's sweetheart, Dan O'Hara. (The Kerry Gow).

Ireland is in trouble with the crown soldiers, and orders have been issued to arrest any man having arms in his possession. Hay, with his henchman, O'Drive, schemes to have pikes found in Dan's shop. O'Drive secures a willing tool in Kiernan, an unfortunate drunkard. Learning of Drew's inability to discharge his mortgage, Hay buys it up and threatens to evict the farmer within a week if he does not promise his daughter's hand to the wily land agent.

Kiernan places the pikes in O'Hara's blacksmith shop and O'Drive notifies the soldiers. Dan wins Drew's consent to his marrying Nora, but his happiness is short ived, as the soldiers, guided by O'Drive, and the 'pikes' 'in Dan's shop, and he is promptly arrested.

Raymond Drew, learning of the mortgage on his father's farm through an old riend, Major Gruff, determines to enter his horse for the Kerry Purse, hoping and braying he will win the race and secure ufficient money to free his father from lebt.

Dinny Doyle, O'Hara's helper and friend, window. Falling in the water near Dinny's boat, the message is quickly recovered and Dinny rushes home, where his faithful wife, by holding the paper to the lamp, reads O'Hara's message.

Dinny secures the clothes and takes up his position beneath the window of the Kerry Gow. Dan removes the grating from the window, crawls out on the ledge and makes a dive into the water many feet below. He quickly crawls into the boat with Dinny and is rowed to safety.

The day of the race Raymond plans to send news from the racetrack by the medium of carrier pigeons. Kiernan, in a delerium, confesses his crime without implicating Hay or O'Drive. His action, however, frees Dan from the law.

O'Drive tells Hay of Raymond's entry for the Kerry Cup and Hay determines to jut in a "ringer" against him.

Shortly after the race starts the first carrier pigeon arrives at the farm with a note stating that Raymond wins the first heat. In the meantime Hay is preparing with his bailiffa to foreclose the mortgage on the farm. The second bird arrives with the message that Raymond has lost the second heat. The third bird comes in but has lost its message. Consternation reigns at the farm until word is brought that Raymond has won the third and final heat. The purse is promptly paid and Raymond rides at breakneck speed to the farm, arriving in time to pay off the mortgage before Hay can foreclose, and the unprincipled land agent is jailed on the further confession of the drunkard, Kiernan.
