How to Buy Musical Instruments for Your Home, or Sell to Other Homes

You Can Sell What You Have or Secure Just the Instrument You Want

The whole human system is "softened" and strengthened through the influence of music. Anyone can bring it right into their home. If you or no one else "plays," how about a talking machine? You say you cannot afford it? Well, there is a way that you can. Also, there is a way for you to dispose of the instrument you have, so that someone who may want it can get it. In both cases, the investment of but a few pennies for a Want Ad in this paper will bring to your very door, the thing you want. That way is to

ARE WE GROWING? WELL HERE'S A NEW GARAGE

It is in Duke Street and Will Be Managed by C. A. Nevins

Another fine new garage has been erected in the city marking the epoch of prosperity about St. John—a fine story brick building in Duke Street near Charlotte which will be occupied by the Empire Garage and Supply Co. as an automobile garage. The structure which was built by Edward Bates is one of the more recent additions to the city near the commercial area and is particularly well suited to the purpose for which it is intended. Charles A. Nevins, who was formerly with J. A. Pugsley & Co. will act as manager of the new concern.

The new building is used, in the downstairs portion, for general garage purposes while the upstairs rooms are for offices, cloak rooms, and a chauffeur's apartment. The floor of the garage is of concrete and is mechanically large to accommodate thirty cars. It is a clear space uninterrupted by pillars or other obstructions. Some new work in the garage. The intention of the company is to establish a mechanical repair shop in another building to be added in a short time. In this damage to cars can be repaired. Frederick Breen will be superintendent of the mechanics and of the business. The garage is equipped with all modern accessories, including portable electric buffers, and a 400 gallon Bowser tank and pump.

REMARKABLE DEVELOPMENT IN SURGERY

Shut Off The Area To Be Operated On

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

Sir Berkeley Moynihan's Statement to Medical Congress—The King and Queen and The Teachers—Queen May Take Up Golf

(Times' Special Correspondence)

London, Aug. 11.—A remarkable development in surgery, by which the area operated on may be shut off entirely from the brain for a period of nearly a week, if necessary, was announced by Sir Berkeley Moynihan at the meetings of the British Medical Association. Hitherto, it was explained, each incision of the knife was liable to cause shock to the brain, but under the new process barriers are placed on all the nerve centres, like gates across country roads, thus isolating completely the field of operation.

Sir Berkeley Moynihan said that surgeons are apt to delude themselves with the idea that, because a patient lies unconscious and apparently unresponsive to any hurt, no damage to his nerve centres is possible. Here, however, a great mistake was made.

Either anaesthesia, declared Sir Berkeley, does not put all the brain to sleep, or, if it does, and by far the more important part, is awake and ready to be acted on and to be injured just as much as if the patient were awake.

"Happily," he said, "we are now able to make certain that any operative procedure in the abdomen can be carried out thoroughly without the infliction on the patient of any intolerable pain, and without his being caused to suffer any particular distress afterwards. We owe this entirely to Crile (an American surgeon), to whom the debt of our success is already a heavy one, but I think that the surgeon of tender heart his latest achievement must bring the most profound satisfaction."

Sir Berkeley explained the immense benefit of this new principle, which is termed "technical anaesthesia."

"Crile," he said, "has shown that in the conditions recognized as shock, definite and demonstrable changes occur in the cells of the brain, which have discharged all the energy they are capable of, and the result is a state of nervous energy due to the excitation which is caused by the infliction of a surgical injury, each of which is small, or to the infliction of one overwhelming impression."

"The fact that some surgeons produce little constitutional disturbance or little shock, while others may cause very serious collapse, is not due to differences in the patient, the anaesthetist, the method, or anything else, but to the surgeon himself. In any case of 'canine' surgery we operate on the 'canine' principle of anaesthesia, when the biting and tearing of the body is not the object, but the removal of the tissue which is to be operated on with one eye on the clock. They judge of the severity of any procedure by the fewness of the minutes which it has taken to complete. These have been the reasons why the 'canine' surgeons, but there are other surgeons who believe in the 'right hand' who use the utmost gentleness, and who deal lovingly with every tissue they touch. The scalpel is in some hands a royal sceptre; in others it is but a rude maul."

"The perfect surgeon must have the heart of a lion and the hand of a lamb—never the claws of a lion and the heart of a sheep."

Shut Off Part Operated On

"Now, I have said that under ether anaesthesia the brain is in great part shut off from the body, and that surgical operation there is in reply to every incision, every pull of the retractors, in which every physical contact, a change in the pulse, the respiration, and the blood pressure, and no general anaesthesia can shelter the brain from the assault committed on it by the injuries inflicted during an operation on another part of the body. It is now suggested, therefore, that by means of local anaesthetics—no-vocaine for the skin, quinine and urea for the internal mucous membrane—a barrier can be erected round the area to be operated on, so that no nerve impulses can be conveyed from the part to be operated on to the brain at all during the operation, but for a period of from one to five days subsequently."

"The effect of this," explained Sir Berkeley, "is that the operation can now be conducted in an area which for the time being does not belong to the patient, which he cannot reach by any impulse directed toward it, and which can be dealt with as the surgeon wishes without the patient having any power of receiving impressions from it."

The King and the Teachers

The garden-party given a few weeks ago by the king and queen to the head teachers of London is an historical event of considerable importance. From the times of Ethelbert a Winchester man before the reign of William of Wykeham) many English sovereigns have shown a lively care for the progress of education. To Henry VI. England owes Eton to Elizabeth, Westminster, and Shrewsbury Grammar Schools are only a few of the survivals of Edward VI's foundations in the sixteenth century. Henry VIII, James I., and Queen Anne all had a hand in work of the same kind, and in later days Queen Victoria, King Edward and the present king have given many proofs of their keen interest in the welfare of the public schools. But on a recent Saturday King George and Queen Mary went a step further. In a strikingly picturesque and original way they showed the high honor in which they hold the whole of the teaching profession, and not only one part of it.

Many of the world's greatest men have been teachers. But Socrates is not the only one among them who has known what it is to be despised and rejected of men, indignantly, or, as the common lot of the brotherhood, such expressions as "pedagogue" and "usher" were once invariably used as terms of reproach and even contempt. Fortunately that contempt, chiefly born of misunderstanding and prejudice, is fast dying out. The timely and graceful act of the king and queen should have a powerful effect in correcting the national estimate of the worth of the teachers. The fact that the recognition given to them by the sovereign took a social rather than an official or professional form is of the highest consequence.

The charity performance at the London Coliseum on October 11, at which it is hoped the king and queen will be present, is the outcome of an idea originated by Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, who greatly desired, on the occasion of her forthcoming farewell season in London, to express, in a practical manner, her thanks to the people of Great Britain and Ireland for the national tribute which was presented to her last year on the occasion of her 68th birthday. Mme. Bernhardt is preparing a message to the public, in which she will outline the details of her scheme to benefit the fund of the Charing Cross Hospital, which is making its special appeal for $800,000, and the French Hospital in Shaftesbury-avenue, with which she is intimately associated.

A ladies' committee, under the presidency of Lady Londale, is being formed in connection with the former hospital, for the sale of tickets. The programme of the performance will contain the most distinguished names in the theatrical, musical, and variety world.

Queen May Take Up Golf

The statement that the queen has decided to take up golf seriously when the royal family go to Balmoral in the autumn has aroused great interest in golfing circles. Her Majesty is not altogether unfamiliar with the game. The Prince of Wales and Princess Mary have initiated her into some of its mysteries. There is a good deal of speculation regarding the player who will be chosen as the royal teacher. The man who has had most experience with the royal family is Ben Sayers, a famous professional.

Forty lives lost when steamer sank in Alaskan waters

Juneau, Alaska, Aug. 18.—Twenty-five or more passengers and seven members of the crew of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company's steamer Slate of California perished Sunday morning in Camber Bay, ninety miles south of Juneau, when the vessel struck an uncharted rock and sank in three minutes with many passengers imprisoned in their staterooms.

The steamship left Seattle last Wednesday night for Skagway and way points. The purser lost all his records and it is not possible to give a complete list of the missing.

A great hole was torn in the bottom of the Slate of California. The vessel and cargo, mail and express are a total loss. The ship was valued at $400,000.

The shipmaster, Jefferson, of the Alaska steamer line, south-bound, heard the wireless call of the sinking vessel, and turned back to rescue the survivors, who had taken to the small boats and life belts. Ten of the passengers had suffered so severely from exposure that it was necessary to take them to a hospital in Juneau for treatment.
