fore they would get a chance to present the promised measure. If they had been endeavoring to redeem their promises they should have brought it in last sesvote upon it, and if they gave another member to East Yale (as he expected they would to be just), and if he thought its other portions were right and just he would give it his hearty support.

Mr. McBride condemned the government for not having said anything about redistribution in redemption of their promises last session, while what was found in the speech from the throne , this year had evidently been brought in at the demand of the member for Rossland, to secure a member for Boundary. Now, if the third member for Vanconver had not forced the hand of the government, nothing on the subject of redistribution generally would have been heard of. If it had been the government's policy it would certainly have been included in the speech from the throne. The Turner government had acted according to its lights, and for what it believed to be the good of the country at large, and while in many respects he had not agreed with the party on this, he could not but say that in many respects, for example with regard to Cassiar, the Turner party had proceeded with statesmanlike appreciation of the future.

Hon. Mr. Henderson held that the derange. He did not propose to follow its wanderings, but he would confine himself and the amendment. He had, he would confess, considerable sympathy with the principle involved in the resolution of the third member for Vancouver-more sympathy with it than had the leader of the opposition. The principle of the resolution was redistribution, and the necessity therefore. He quite, agreed that a measure of redistribution should be brought in at an early date. This was a position that he had long held. than gentlemen opposite would like. There was no truth in the assertion that the hand of the government in this matter had been forced. It had been quite unnecessary for the government to do more than vote down the resolution knowing that the leader of the oppostion, the member for South Victoria, the member for East Koctenay, and several others would to be consistent have been obliged to stand with them. The resolution of the third member for Vancouver therefore had forced nothing. Hon. Mr. Henderson had always been in sympathy with the principle involved, and could only object to the assertion that all business should be suspended while this matter received consideration. This was not necessary-although the bill should, be laid before the House at the earliest possible moment, and he would endeavor to have it so.

Hon. Mr. Henderson-The bill is now in preparation. I don't say that it will be brought in to-day, but when it is said that it has, been forced by members of the opposition, the facts evidently are not known. It has been said that the government has so narrow a majority that they cannot bring in a fair measurethen vote it down. I don't know that the government could go to the country on a better measure. I am prepared to go out, if need be, on such a fair and equitable measure as we will offer. If It does not meet with the approbation of the House I am willing to go out-

As matter of fact, done this very thing to the redistribution measure he would not pledge himself as to how he should rather sent Mr. Geo, Kennedy, before the session, asking that it be put in the speech from the throne, and promising, if this were done, he would give the redistribution measure loyal support. Six

M. Martin) would have been satisfied with-and from this it. was quite apparent that the government policy had been amended perforce even since the session opened.

Mr. Martin was very glad to hear the hon, members for North Yale and Revelstoke say that there should be a redistribution bill brought down and then an appeal to the country as soon as posright to linger on in its present miserable, precarious fashion. It was against bate had taken an unwarrantably wide the best interests of the country. The government was not in a position to-day to bring in a redistribution bill unless to the principle raised by the resolution he was prepared to support it. The goverment acknowledged that.

Mr. Martin passed on to deal with the matter of the voters' lists of the four coast cities. Referring to the manner in which the government had undertaken matter. to clean up the lists of those cities, he said it was one of the most disgraceful he came to this province. He said the chief object of the bill was to correct. the known errors of the list. He critieised the government for giving such short notice, even in the case of the Victoria and New Westminster lists: Hedid not know how many voters they had in Victoria, in Vancouver they had 6,000 odd names on the list. He once more protested against what he called the outrage, and said that for a redistribution bill the number of people on the list formed the most important data in determining what representation should be given. The present list did not properly give the voters in Vancouver at the present day. As he had other points to deal with and as it was nearing 6 o'clock he suggested the Speaker see that hour,
