JANUARY.—Farmers may wonder why we here introduce the name of Bismarck, the Prussian premier. Read what follows:—The Count on hearing that the peasants on his estate were in the habit of working on Sundays, wrote to his bailiff to stop it. He replied that all their time was occupied in working on his estate, and they had only Sundays to work on their own land. The Count then authorized him to allow those who had land to harvest their own crops first when they were ripe, but to forbid their working on Sunday. The peasants were so much affected by this generous offer that they resolved that the Count should lose nothing by caring for them first. His work has been better attended to than ever. Farmers should keep the Sabbath.
