humor caused an incessant and intolerable itching, and the skin cracked so as to cause the blood to flow in many places whenever I moved. My sufferings were great, and my life a burden. I commenced the use of the Sarsafarantla. In April last, and have used it regularly since that time. My condition began to improve at once. The sores have all healed, and I feel perfectly well in every respect—being now able to do a good day's work, although 73 years of age. Many inquire what has wrought such a cure in my case, and what has wrought such a cure in my case, and I tell them, as I have here tried to tell you, AYER'S SARSAPRILLA. Glover, Yt., Oct. 21, 1882. In visiting the wards one is struck by the insufficiency of accommodation they afford. There are two down stairs, each thirty feet long by twenty-five wide, for the use of the men; one of these contains eight beds, the other contains three beds, a large stove, a table, and some chairs and benches. There is now in the hospital a man whose aim in life seems to have been much cultivated, but it is not by any means poor, as the crops of those who have experimented in agriculture testify. The lumber district produces a fine growth of wood, wherein is found that the offensive nature of the disease game in abundance; the rivers abound the water. The fixed idea of each that his or her disease is not leprosy and is not incurable is a merciful hallucination; for, with their comrades dying before them in all the agonies of strangulation or suffocation, the prospect of the same ending to their own subscripts, would be almost too much for human endurance calmly to own starrings, would be almost too much for human endurance calmy to contemplate. It is not easy to give an idea of the impression produced by the first sight of the lepers. Strong men have fainted and turned sick at the sight of such affliction. The ward first visited is that of the men. Here there are exemplified various stages of the disease. To an inexperienced eye some of these men look well and strong; but, alas! they will tell you that the deadly symptoms are there, either in discoloration of the skin, swellings, contracted joints, or some other fatal sign. One of the surest indications seems to be the contraction of the muscles between the thumb and index finger; this is said to be a peculiarity of the disease.
