to suffering and struggle so palpably. Beside him, Goeth seems to stand crowned by effortless achievement. But what pair they are ! Rietschel's great success in his statues lies in his subtle expression of their noble friendship. Goethe's hand on Schiller's shoulder, and the one laurel wreath which the hands of both touch, in such wise that you cannot be sure which gives or which takes, symbolize a reality far too rare in the annals of literature.—[Critical Essays.

A young man was seen to enter a church during service. He paused at the entrance; the congregation stared; he advanced a few steps, and calmly surveying the whole assembly, commenced a deliberate march up the broad aisle. Not a pew opened; the audience were too busy for civility. He wheeled, and in the same manner performed a march, stepping as if to "Roslyn Castle," or the time of the "Dead March in Saul," and disappeared. A few minutes after he re-entered with a large block upon his shoulder, as much as he could well stagger under. Again the good people started, and half arose from their seats, with their books in their hands. At length he placed the block in the very centre of the principal passage, and seated himself upon it. When for the first time the reproach was felt. Every pew door in the house was instantly thrown open. But no, the stranger was a gentleman; he came not there for disturbance; he moved not, smiled not, but preserved the utmost decorum until the service was concluded, when he deliberately shouldered the block, and, to the same slow step, bore it off and placed it where he had found it. The congregation is now thus

UTILIZING SURPLUS APPLES. — "We know of at least one farmer in this State who makes a speciality of drying apples for market, chiefly of the late summer and early fall varieties. In a room in the domestic department of his house he has constructed a sheet-iron hot-air chamber or flue, connected with a large stove, this heated chamber being provided with a series of trays, or deep pan-like shelves, and upon these sliced green apples are placed, where they remain until thoroughly dried.

During the period when the early apples are coming on he employs two or three girls, who are kept paring and preparing the apples for drying for many weeks in succession. They are all carefully sliced, and when dried are packed in boxes of five and ten pounds respectively, labelled with his name and the name of the taru, and thus put upon the market. They find a ready sale and the proprietor tells us the demand for dried apples of his 'trade mark' is constantly increasing." — Farmer and Dealer.

Newspaper Laws.

We call the special attention of postmasters and subscribers to the following synopsis of the newspaper laws:

1. A postmaster is required to give notice by letter (returning a paper does not answer the law) when a subscriber does not take his paper out of the office and state the reasons for its not being taken. Any neglect to do so makes the postmaster responsible to the publisher for payment.
2. If any person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay all arrearages or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether it be taken from the office or not. There can be no legal discontinuance until the payment is made.
3. Any person who takes a paper from the post-office, whether directed to his name or another, or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for the pay-

4. A subscriber orders his paper to be stopped and the publisher publishes the order and the publisher continues to send the subscriber is bound to pay for it if he takes it out of the post-office. This procedure upon the ground that a man must pay what he uses.

5. The courts have decided that refusing to take a newspaper and periodical from the post-office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

At the present moment there are more members laid up than was ever known before, and some of them are as seriously indisposed that their recovery is doubtful. Of the Ministry, the two Popes are confined to their bed, and also Sir Charles Tupper, the latter suffering from inflammation of the lungs. Sir John A. Macdonald, Mr. Joseph Cunnell and Killam, from the Lower Provinces, are laid up with erysipelas, the former seriously. In addition, there are several members on the sick list who are unknown in the West, and whose
