Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

IS IT NECESSARY?

Why do women wear stupid clothes? Some do it, I suppose, because they haven't had an opportunity to know any better. A few because they don't care (or more likely because they think they don't care). And a few others because they have had the opportunity and haven't grasped it. And in that case I call the stupid clothes unforgivable clothes.

I believe I have told you before that I mean by stupid clothes—not expensive clothes, not unfashionable clothes, of course not; but clothes that show that the woman who wears them hasn't used her brains in picking them out. I was present at a gathering composed wholly of college graduates the other day.

The Best Class in the World.

Few of the women were expensive dressed. The most belonged to that splendid middle class who have more money to create pleasant homes and to educate their children and give them every chance in the world than they have for expensive pleasure or costly clothes. But they were, for the majority, dressed tastefully. It is, however, of the minority that I want to speak—the minority who wore stupid clothes, clothes which on a college graduate were more than stupid—namely, unforgivable.

Here was one example: A woman who has a small, narrow face had on a large red velvet hat, heavily weighted with four or five black feathers and a large buckle. Underneath the hat her small plain face looked at least three sizes smaller and three times plainer than it needed to.

Made Me Lose Track of the Speech.

Another woman had on a velvet dress which would have been good looking if it had not been for the neck arrangement. Truly that neck arrangement has more than one spin answer for, for it not only spoiled the dress, but it also fascinated me when my eye lit upon it, by its inapplicability and its needlessness, to such an extent that I completely lost track of what the speaker was saying. The neck of this gown was square; that square was filled in with white net, up to a V, and above that V was another layer of fancy lace, cut in a curve (honest injun!), which ended at just the exact spot which is most unbecoming, just on top of the Adams apple. Now for a woman who has had the advantage of an education and of being with people of taste and refinement, wasn't that an inexcusable hodge-podge of lines.

Don't say "perhaps she couldn't afford anything different." It wouldn't have cost any more to have the thing done with one kind of lace on harmonious lines.

So Have You.

Don't tell me she may have had something more important to think about than clothes.

So has every woman—so have you and I, but that doesn't keep us from employing taste and intelligence in our selection of the clothes we do buy.

If beauty is truth, as some of the poets have assured us, I think it failing to be true to our best selves not to clothe ourselves in all the beauty and harmony of color and line that we can afford.

Will Use Tobacco.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., June 10.—The use of tobacco will not be sacrificed for the church by the clergymen of the General Synod of the Methodist Churches of America the ministers decided at the closing session of the synod here yesterday.

A resolution proposing that the clergymen give up the weed in order to make their church contributions more liberal, was defeated.

A Benighted Heathen.

(From the Jewell, Kansas, Republican.)

An American teacher undertook the task of convincing an indolent native son of the Philippines that it was his duty to get out and hustle. "But why should I work?" inquired the guileless Filipino. "In order to make money," declared the thrifty teacher. "But what do I want with money?" persisted the brown brother. "Why, when you get plenty of money you will be independent and will not have to work any more," replied the teacher. "I don't have to work now," said the native—and the teacher gave it up in disgust.

Many skirts have the drawn-in effect around the bottom.

FAVORS.

When I was sick, with chills and fever, Jones did my chores, day after day; he whacked up kindling with a cleaver, and fed the cow and hens their hay. I told him he was sure a treasure, a model neighbor, nothing less; he said it always gave him pleasure to help a comrade in distress. Recovered from my ills and sorrows, I changed my mind concerning Jones; for every day he comes and borrows, a gun, an egg, or seven bones. He borrows till he makes me dizzy, and I am drooping o'er my lyre; he borrows gas for his tin Lizzie, and wood to feed his kitchen fire. He borrows rugs, he borrows bedding, and my basson, on which to toot, and if he would attend a wedding, he asks me for my Sunday suit. "When you were sick," he keeps reminding, "how cheerfully I did your chores! Your eight-day clock you saw me winding, you saw me chase the cat outdoors. And so I feel quite free to borrow your aunt's buckskin and your cow; I'll bring the blamed things back to-morrow, together with your sulky plow." It's doubtless due to moral blindness, but I detest the pilgrim bland who is resolved to do me wrong, who's bound to lend a helping hand.

Dance frocks feature long pointed aprons, ruffle trimmed. Fancy buttons and loops of cord are featured on wraps. Basque bodices are long.

NO OTHER WAY.

I don't like work. I'd rather loaf and never do a thing. And watch the white clouds drifting by and hear the robins sing; I rather live a life of ease than one of toil, I say.

But no one wants to pay me well for loafing round all day.

I don't like digging stubborn soil, and grubbing with the hoe, I'd rather sit beneath a tree and watch the garden grow; I'd rather rest most any time than spade up yellow clay.

But corn and beets and things I need aren't ever raised that way.

I don't like spending all my strength for silver and for gold, I don't like saving money for the days that I'll be old; I'd rather be a spendthrift now and squander all my pay.

But soon the poorhouse gets the man who tries to live that way.

I don't like work. I'd rather loaf and live a life of ease, If I could have my way on earth, I'd do just what I please; But I can't sit around and shirk and feed my children, too, And so for them I gladly face the work I have to do.

'Twould be a wonder world, I vow, if no one had to toil, If everything that mortals need just sprouted from the soil; But change this life the way we will, Improve it how we may, For fame and fortune men must work—there is no other way.

MINARD'S LINIMENT is the only Liniment asked for at my store and the only one we keep for sale. All the people use it. HARLIN FULTON.

Beloved by Britons.

The announcement that Alexandra, the Queen-Mother, had recovered from her recent illness and was again able to enjoy outdoor life, was welcome news to Britons the world over, because she is held in deep affection by the whole British people. Since she came to Great Britain from Denmark in the spring of 1863 to be the bride of Edward Prince of Wales, she has been one of us. Her adopted land has been home to her since her own country whose fortunes she has followed with undivided interest. For thirty-eight years she was Princess of Wales, for nine Queen Consort, and for ten, since the death of her husband, King Edward VII, she has been Queen-Mother. During all these years she has done much to further the philanthropic work of her country, giving special attention to the work of caring for the wounded soldiers who served in the South African War and in the recent world conflict.

Of all the high personages who witnessed the victory parade in London none received from the assembled thousands a warmer greeting than that which resounded through the streets when the Queen-Mother appeared. Field Marshal Earl Haig stopped in his march to salute her and received from her hands a bouquet, which was presented not only as a tribute to the Commander-in-Chief, but to all the brave men who had served under him in the war. A domestic matter no doubt added to the interest of the Queen-Mother in Earl Haig. His wife, Countess Haig, was once a Lady-in-Waiting in the Queen-Mother's household and a close personal friend.
