PHILL DOWN THE FLAG.

Has it ever struck Deacon Cameron that that Dakota business is played out? Probably it has for John is a thoughtful man. Besides it seems he has a weakness for reclining on boulevards—this is for meditation f course. We have reclined on boulevards ourself, strictly for meditatory purposes, and know how it is. Privately we will reommend to John a substitute for bouleirds when boulevards are no longer handy. it's lamp posts. Now that the winter oming on we may state, John, that lamp posts are first-class things for meditating

Does Griffin think John can't see through that flimsy pretext of pasting up a consul's sign-board in the window Pitch into him, deacon! Make him haul down that flag. An indignant city rises in wrath against having that flag flaunted in its face. That flag may be flaunted out of the back window, but never out of the front. One result of such a change in the law would be o keep all hotels and saloons out of districts which are at present free from their presence. Another would be to shut up many that are licensees, who are said to have acquired ome kind of vested right to sell in that parcular spot. But there are two sides to that question. It is a well known fact that the presence of a licensed house tends to depreciate all the property in its vicinity, and surely the vested right of the property as is that of the liquor seller. There is no ouseholder should not have the privilege of saying whether he is willing to have a licensed near his own to sell intoxicating drink.

It may be said that such a provision would leprive many respectable hotels—even ouses like the Rossin and the Queen's-of their licenses. Perhaps it might, but it is not at all likely that the best hotels would lose the privilege of selling liquors. On the contrary, if the number of licenses to be granted in each polling subdivision were left to be determined, as it should be, by "The actual loss, and apparently a loss popular vote, leaving the choice of houses to the commissioners, it is altogether likely that the effect would be to shut up the local competitors of the large hotel bars. But even if all the licenses should have to go, what of that? Such hotels as the Rossin and the Queen's are not dependent on the sale of liquor for their existence, and there would be good hotels under a general prohibitory liquor law. In order that there should be as little inconvenience as possible taken only once in two or three years.

The true and undeniable causes which led to this newspaper panic are these: Within the past three years there has sprung up in New York a class of cheap, readable, crisp, lively morning papers like Truth and the Journal. Trying to Save Her Children. The Rat Portage Progress says that while Mrs. Capt. After depositing the unconscious boy on the bank of the river she started back for the little girl, but before reaching the canoe the child sank. subdivision during the present year?" A majority of the electors of any locality would by means of this very simple, inexpensive and effective method of declaring their wish have it in their power to keep the pernicious traffic at a distance from themselves, and as the increasing tendency amongst the people in each locality would maturally be to do so the number of licenses would constantly diminish. It has been established beyond controversy that the consumption of intoxicating liquors diminishes as the facilities for procuring them decrease, and a sure means of curtailing the amount spent by the community on alcoholic beverages is to lessen the number of places where they are kept for sale.

Let us see how such a law would work in less than being and the consent of the home authorities of the consent of the home authorities, if not against their will.

And why not? Why should several millions of English-speaking people on the other side of the globe not be supposed to know their own interests better than the authorities of the globe not be supposed to know their own interests better than the authorities of Downing street do? The penalty of independent action, it may be said, will be dismissal, with a reprimand. Why should that have any terrors for the Australian? Some of their public men who now crave for imperial titles would feel bad about losing all chance of getting them, but the mass of the people would go on working out their natural destiny, unconscious of any change in their political condition except from the welling up of national life within them.

Let us see how such a law would work in Catarrh-A New Treatment.
