

THE BRIDE'S ROOM.

Flora Gage was tall and slender, and shaped like a Juno, with dark, wistful eyes, and black, silk-soft tresses, and a skin where the rosy blood glowed through at every passing emotion of her mind—too beautiful, perhaps, for her beauty had brought to her shrine the frosty-haired old lover whose gold had at last purchased her.

"Such good luck!" said Mrs. Gage. "Why, he's worth a quarter of a million!" "And he keeps such horses!" echoed Mr. Gage, rubbing his hands. "I'm very glad now that I never encouraged Fred Templeton. He's a nice young fellow enough for aught I know, but I don't believe he's got a hundred dollars ahead in the world."

"But, papa, poor Flora had fallen, 'I love him'!" "Flora," said her mother, solemnly, "you're talking in a very improper manner. No well-regulated young woman ever loves a man until after she's married to him!"

"I know I shouldn't love old Peckley if I was married forty times over to him!" audaciously rejoined Flora, when her papa and mamma cried out, "Hush—hush," and Flora was "put down" at once.

Up to the last moment, when her papa had entreated a vague, unspoken fear that Flora might elope with Fred Templeton, or boldly repulse her ancient lover, declaring that she would 100 times rather die than marry him; but no such catastrophe had transpired.

"Really," said Mr. Gage, "Flora has behaved very well. I didn't think the child had so much sense." "Fred Templeton was here this morning," said Mrs. Gage, gloomily. "Well, let him come! He'll be safely married to Peckley by this time to-morrow."

"But they made an appointment to go out to visit the haunted house by moonlight this evening!" "I know it; but Peckley has gone with them. Sly dog, that—sly old dog!" and Mr. Gage chuckled complacently.

"Well, I only hope it will be all right," said Mrs. Gage, who was one of those estimable women who have the faculty of looking at everything in the most melancholy light.

While this conjugal tete-a-tete was transpiring at the Gage mansion the bride-elect, was wandering over the deserted rooms of the old "haunted house" in the valley below, with Fred Templeton at her side and Philo Peckley trailing behind.

"It is really haunted!" said Mr. Peckley, stopping to wipe his damp brow, for he had been walking briskly; although it was a December night.

"Oh, there can be no doubt about it," said Mrs. Gage. "Nobody has occupied the premises in twenty years. It's a ghost all in white that flits through the upper room and rings the bell!"

"Shall we turn back?" said Mr. Templeton quietly. "Turn back! nonsense!" cried Peckley. "Why, I'd as soon go over the whole house by myself as not."

"Not into the haunted garret?" "What haunted garret?" demanded Peckley. "The garret," said Templeton, with great solemnity, "where the ghost lives among the ruinous beams, and where strange sounds appear the chance passer."

"I wouldn't be the man to risk it," said Templeton, shrugging his shoulders. Mr. Peckley's eyes sparkled. He was aware that he was not getting the value for the romantic element—here was an opportunity for him to outshine that dashing young scoundrel of a Templeton.

"Come on," he cried, "you shall see for yourselves!" "I'll go three times around the garret, all alone; you shall hear the sound of my footsteps!" Ghosts, indeed! What nonsense!

"Well, if you really have the courage," began Templeton. "Why, Fred?" laughed Flora, "what has come to you? I never knew you allied with the quality of terror before!"

"Ah," said Fred, coughing, "I don't want to see a man placed in such a terrible—stricken—circumstances before he's had the ladder leading up to the garret. Mr. Peckley—be a little careful, I beg of you."

Mr. Peckley's only reply was an upward scramble, which made the ruinous rooms of the ladder squeak violently. But his blood chilled a little, nevertheless, as he heard the retreating footsteps of Mr. Templeton descending the ladder. The wailing beams of the garret, the vague, shimmering reflections of the moonlight on the floor, the mournful whistling of the winter wind through the chimney stacks, which rose like a monster mauling in the very centre of the place, were none of them the most inspiring order, and as Philo stood with clattering teeth in the middle of the floor he black and skurried across, like an imp of darkness, close to his very feet.

"Pooh!" said Mr. Peckley, feeling himself alive all over. "That's afraid of a rat!" He only going three times round this place, and Templeton doesn't do it for his life!"

Three several times Mr. Peckley trotted round the garret, with starting eyes, pallid cheeks, and ears that quivered like the shivering of a windmill in a storm. Then he fled precipitately to the trap-door and strove to pull it up.

But it would not yield to his strength. Evidently it was bolted or chained below. "They were afraid I'd look out, the thought, triumphantly. 'They didn't know the stuff I was made of. Hello, Templeton? Templeton, I say!'"

Still no answer. "They didn't clear his voice, which had somehow grown a little husky." "Templeton! Templeton—don't! Flora! Flora! Hello-o-o-o, I say!"

And the echoes, weird and wild, returned his outcry, and then there was a hollow howl of silence over all.

Mr. Peckley scrambled to his feet and ran to the end window, which commanded a view of the road beyond the frozen river and belt of the leafless trees. There they were, Fred and Flora, arm in arm, descending the ladder, which rose as possible, while he—Philo Peckley—was barred and bolted into the great garret of the haunted house!

"No Mr. Peckley yet? And the guests all here—and the minister waiting—and Flora ready (round this half hour! I don't understand this at all, Mrs. Gage—no, not at all!"

And Mr. Gage ran backward and forward, with a face as red as a peony, and decidedly apologetic symptoms about his eyes.

"Oh, dear, dear!" said Mrs. Gage, wringing her hands, and thinking of the wedding banquet, where splendors would hardly brook delay. "What shall we do? Do you suppose Philo Peckley has eloped with his mind, Mr. Gage?"

Changed his mind? The pony red changed to a vivid purple. "A man change his mind about marrying my daughter? If he has, man, it will be the last opportunity he will have to change it in my house! I consider this an insult—a most unmitigated insult! I'll give him five minutes more by my watch, and then, if he isn't here—" as ever breathed! No one shall say my daughter was left to wear the willow. If Peckley don't make his appearance in short order, he'll find himself too late, that's all I've got to tell you.

"He's as good as his word!" Five minutes after the guests were all electrified by the entrance of the wedding cortege. But instead of Philo Peckley, the bridegroom was Mr. Frederick Templeton.

Scarcely were the mystic words pronounced which tie the knot which only death's chill fingers can undo—scarcely had the lovely and blushing bride begun to receive the hearty congratulations of her friends, then there was a bustle in the hall and a stout, short elderly man rushed in, his hair powdered with dust and cobwebs hanging about him. It was Philo Peckley.

"I've come to be married!" he said. "Here is my bride!" "You are too late, sir!" roared papa Gage, furiously.

"Allow me to introduce my wife, sir, Mrs. Templeton," said Fred, with a mischievous twinkle in his eyes. "I hope you were not inconvenienced by the ghosts! In love and war, you know, Mr. Peckley, all stages are equal!"

Philo Peckley stood against. He had no heart to tell of the dismal night he had passed in the garret of the haunted house, in the company of rats and spiders—no words to describe his relief when a passing neighbor heard his cries, and released him from his solitary post. He had been outwitted, outtraced, outgeneraled! With-out a word he turned and quitted the house, never to enter it more.

To Dyspeptics.

The most common signs of Dyspepsia, or Indigestion, are an oppression at the stomach, nausea, flatulency, water-brash, heart-burn, vomiting, loss of appetite, and constipation. Dyspeptic patients suffer untold miseries, bodily and mental. They should stimulate the digestion, and secure regular daily action of the bowels, by the use of moderate doses of Ayer's Pills.

After the bowels are regulated, one of these Pills, taken each day after dinner, is usually all that is required to complete the cure. Ayer's Pills are sugar-coated and purely vegetable—a pleasant, entire safe, and reliable medicine for the cure of all disorders of the stomach and bowels. They are the best of all purgatives for family use.

WHITE STAR LINE

ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS
Between New York and Liverpool
VIA QUEENSTOWN.

These splendid steamers are without exception among the largest ocean steamers afloat, and make the fastest average passages across the Atlantic. Their accommodations for saloon and steerage passengers are unequalled.

The Steamer Accommodations are of the highest order. The food is excellent, and every married couple or family has a little cabin room to themselves. The fare is strictly liberal, and is rendered more so by the fact that the White Star Line is a half dollar less than any other line.
