

France has not yet read those tokens, or she misunderstands them. Oh, these faithful subjects of hers! Look at them, your Excellency." The Bishop pointed toward the crowd of citizens hard at work on the walls. "There is not a man of them, but is ready to risk life and fortune for the honor and dominion of France, and yet they are treated by the court with such neglect and burthened with exactions that take from life the sweet reward of labor. They cannot do the impossible that France requires of them—fight her battles, till her fields, and see their bread taken from them by these new ordinances of the Intendant."

"Well, my Lord," replied the Governor affecting a jocularity he did not feel, for he knew how true were the words of the Bishop. "We must all do our duty, nevertheless. If France requires impossibilities of us, we must perform them! That is the old spirit! If the skies fall upon our heads we must like true Gauls hold them up on the points of our lances! What say you, Rigaud de Vaudreuil? Cannot one Canadian surround ten New Englanders?" The Governor alluded to an exploit of the gallant officer whom he turned to address.

"Probatum est, your Excellency! I once with six hundred Canadians surrounded all New England. Prayers were put up in all the churches of Boston for deliverance, when we swept the Connecticut from end to end with a broom of fire."

"Brave Rigaud! France has too few like you!" remarked the Governor with a look of admiration.

Rigaud bowed and shook his head modestly, "I trust she has ten thousand better," but added, pointing at his fellow officers who stood conversing at a short distance, "Marshal Saxe has few the equals of these in his camp, my Lord Count!" and well was the compliment deserved.

They were gallant men, intelligent in looks, polished in manners and brave to a fault, and all full of that natural gaiety that sits so gracefully on a French soldier.

Most of them wore the laced coat and waistcoat, chapeau, boots, lace ruffles, sash and rapier of the period. A martial costume befitting brave and handsome men. Their names were household words in every cottage in New France and many of them as frequently spoken of in the English colonies, as in the streets of Quebec.
