

A FEW SPECIMEN REVIEWS.

'These Lectures are simply intended to whet the reader's appetite, an effect which they may well produce.'

Review of Theology and Philosophy, Edinburgh.

'Mr. Jordan has attracted much attention among specialists in this field by the results of his studies.'

Presbyterian, Toronto.

'The learned lecturer has shown the free development of studies in Comparative Religion, and has not abstained from drawing conclusions touching the aid they furnish towards initiating a new religious syncretism.'

Revue de l'histoire des religions, Paris.

'The lecturer emphasises the fact that, in any broad treatment, the practical question must be faced: What is the bearing of the study of Comparative Religion on this and that individual religion? For instance: what light, if any, has the study of Comparative Religion thrown upon the high traditional claims of Christianity.'

Chronicle, Oxford.

'To prove that thoughtful people are not—as some reviewers have said—just beginning to take a serious interest in this important subject, Mr. Jordan comments on works which have already appeared, and in so doing supplies valuable guidance to students.'

Methodist Recorder, London.

'Mr. Jordan gives detailed reasons for his disagreement with Dr. Sanday's identification of Comparative Religion and the History of Religions.'

Christian Commonwealth, London.

'Of great interest to students of Comparative Religion.'

London Quarterly Review.
