

From Brasenose College.

Brasenose College, Oxford, June 5, 1852.

We have much pleasure in bearing testimony in favor of Mr. John Ambery, B.A., of Brasenose College, who is about to offer himself a candidate for the Second Mastership of ———. For four years Mr. Ambery was a pupil of the Vice-Principal, and since his appointment to an Hulfian Exhibition, he has attended the lectures on that foundation.

His conduct during that time was marked by uniform regularity, diligence, and correctness.

On presenting himself for examination in Easter Term, 1850, he was referred by the examiners to the second class in Literis Humanioribus, which may be considered a sufficient evidence of his attainments in classical literature. His scholarship is sound, and taste in translation considerable. Since taking his degree he has read with private pupils, and must have had some experience in imparting knowledge to others.

We have no doubt that he would be found a ready and able assistant in carrying out any system of instruction and discipline which he might be called upon to support. And if he should succeed in obtaining the appointment for which he is a candidate, we feel sure that there will be no reason to regret the selection.

The Rev. John Ashworth, Dean, Tutor, and Mathematical Lecturer, is unavoidably absent from Oxford, or he would, I doubt not, have gladly added his signature.
