COMMENTS.

The Guardian (London, Eng.): "Dr. Low's illustration of the Christian doctrine of the Trinity from physical science is admirable. The whole book is most fresh and interesting, and is well worth reading."

The Interior (Chicago): "The lecturer believes that there is no breach (between faith and science). . . . The wide circulation of views like this will have the effect of dispelling alarm and enabling both philosophers and believers to discuss the questions involved with calmness and with profit."

The Christian Guardian (Toronto): "Five interesting and valuable lectures. . . . Though intended, first of all, for the clergy of his own Church Dr. Low's volume has a message for the ministry of all denominations, especially for those the years of whose service lies before them."—(S. P. Rose.)

The Presbyterian Witness (Halifax, N.S.): "We have read these lectures with pleasure, for they show in the clearest way that the author has patiently and courageously grappled with the perplexing problem of our day, the restatement of the Christian virtues in terms that shall not contradict the truths of modern science."
