THOSE WOLVES.

Up north they scoff at the idea of wolves attacking men. If they are right we blush to think of the men- dicity of the pioneers who told thrilling tales of fights with wolf packs and of hunters who never came back and whose drumsticks and wishbones were found picked bare by search parties of neighbors.

The Soo Daily Star has interviewed Old Sam Martin on the subject, and he is scornful. He says: "My experience with wolves leads me to believe that the Algonqua wolf is the biggest coward that walks the earth. He is scared of his own shadow, and not at all the smart fellow he is said to be. Tramp a snowshoe in the woods and he'll keep out of it. Why? Cowardice; he's afraid something might be in the ring. Any man that says he was ever set on by a wolf is a liar," said Sam, with em- phasis.

"Let me tell you, son, these wolf attacks happen over on the west range. I never knew anybody to be attacked by a wolf—I mean the Algonqua grey wolf—and I never found any of the stories to be anything else than a camp yarn."
