Laurier and Touranstatements concerning the character and career of that wily politician have roused ed quiet. the Opposition papers in an unwonted manner-even for them-and they show that the great Conservative leader may not expect a continuation of the considerate treatment with which his attacks on members of the present Dominion Cabinet have heretofore been allowed to pass. The speech of Mr. Cartwright occupies a good many columns of type. In the latter part of it we find the following:—

I intimated that Sir John dare not at intimated that Sir John dare not at the column of type. In the latter purchased the Quebec Mercury, which will become a Local Government supporter, and be in opposition to the Dominion resent attempt to claim his English Privy Councillorship. That statement was disputed. But here we have from his own mouth pretty substantial evidence that he knows it is idle for him to proceed to England on that errand, until he can show in land on that errand, until he can show in the most decisive manner that the people of Canada have condoned his offences. Here is his answer to a question put to him the other day, as to why he did not go to England and be sworn in: "That was his own business, he might say. In the first place he was short of money, and could not afford to go for a pleasure trip; to England. In the second, he proposed to wait until after the elections, and then he would present himself not only as a British subject, a member of the Canadian Government." Now I need not point out to you what a tower of strength it would be for Sir John in the coming election, if he could only first go to England and succeed in getting himself sworn less from Newfoundland, who recently set.

Majesty has no need of his advice in such capacity. Sir, I have grave doubts, even if he were restored to power, whether he would not find it advisable to restrain the ardourstill longer. I happen to know something of the opinion entertained of him by not a few prominent Englishmen, and I doubt much if either those who sat with him at Washington, or those who became acquainted with his doings in London in 1867, not to speak of persons who were familiarly acquainted with his grave misconduct at the time of the first visit of the Prince of Wales to this country in 1860,

A. G. WILLISTON.

The English Detective Police Force.

The four London detective police inspectors and Edward Froggatt, solicitor, indicated for unlawfully conspiring to defeat the first I have exchanged with him. But he will bear in mind that I will take no reply from his followers or his parasites. My challenge is to himself alone, and I have to tell him that if he so declare, I am ready to confront him anywhere, here, or a new book, by Mr. Latham, on the nave to fell him that if he so deciare, I am ready to constituents, or on the floor of the House of Commons, and then and there, if he likes to provoke the fray, I am ready to compare my public life with his, my private life with his, my private life with his, my private life with those to which he can justly lay claim as his own, aye, or even the genuine bona fide sacrifices which each of us may have made. And on this point I must say a word or two. Always, as far back as I can remember, Sir John has been pleased, with what I consider very questionable taste, to make loud parade of his pecuniary sacrifices in the public service. I do not dispute the fact that politics are anything but alucrative occupation, and that for two reasons. First, because, as armle, they completely above a sord a man's life; and secondly, because it always breads in a man's mind a spirit of indifference to his own individual private affairs. Still, you must remember that it is at any rate, at first, a matter of voluntary choice on the parc of those who devote themselves to that pursuit, and that it has its own compensations as well as privations. Neither can I admit that it is, in any case, a ground for whining or complaining, if men find that they cannot attend to politics and make money at one and the same time. Sir, I can tell Si John thatif, as I do not doubt, he has not found politics per se a very money-making occupation, he is far from singular in his experience, and that I can put my finger to-day on half a dozen men sitting round our Council board, of any one of whom it might be truly said that he has made, and is relieved to revenue a substitute of the relieved not only for correct answers to ceived not only for correct solutions but for those which gives i experience, and that I can put my ingerto-day on half a dozen men sitting round our Council board, of any one of whom it might be truly said that he has made, and is making, larger pecuniary sacrifices than ever Sir John made, or, indeed, had the power to make; and further, that the same is true of a great many others in the ranks of both his own party and of ours. Nay, more, if he will have the plain trulh—and this ceaseless parade of his sacrifices deserves that it should be stated—I say for my part, and I have good grounds for my assertion, that I very strongly suspect after all said and done, that Sir John Mac donald is to-day far better provided for than he would probably have been had he never touched politics at all; and if he likes to dispute this statement, I will be prepared to give my reasons in some deteil.

I advise all true Conservatives not to

I advise all true Conservatives not to let themselves be deluded by a false name, nor to admit that such a man as Sir John Macdonald has shown himself to be, can ever again be recognized as their leader. And even if in former days he might once have had some faint claim to such a title, I tell them that now, after his shamedlut reason to them and to his country, they take him back to their confidence, and again recognize him as their chief, they will be committing, only on a far larger scale, and with infinitely worse results, the very crime which the poet laureate makes King Arthur so indignantly repudiate in those noble lines:—

I hold that man the worst of public foes, News of Nov. 1st, says the Anchor Line ate in those noble lines:—

I hold that man the worst of public foes,
Who either for his own or children's sake,
(To save his blood from scandal) lets the wife,
Whom he knows false, abide and rule his house.

Better the king's waste hearth and aching heart,
Than thou reseated in thy place of light,
The mockery of thy people and their bane.

Sir, if they do commit this error their offence will be very grievous, and so, I fear, will be their punishment; and all the apology even their best friends can make for them, will be to plead, as Launcelot later on in the same poem is made to What conditions are implied in the building up of direct trade between Canada and the West Indies? lot later on in the same poem is made to lot later on in the same poem is made to do:—

Their honour rooted in dishonour stood, And faith unfaithful kept them falsely true.

For I ask you all to consider well what Sir John Macdonald's return to power now and at this time would mean for Canada. It would mean, Mr. Chairman, the approval by the electors of a system of organized corruption such as few countries have ever seen. It would mean that declaration by the people of the Dominion that they desire to be robbed and plundered. It would mean that they like to see falsehoods enthroned in high places, and that they deliberately and of choice prefer to have a desperate gambler to rule over them. Sir, the people of Canada need have no fear but that if they do desire all this, they can very easily enjoy their wish, and also that they will assuredly pay the price for it. Twice before in our history, within the last twenty-five years, we have run wild and plunged ourselves into a sea of difficulties, from which we were only extricated after slow that it is mone at all for restoring our predecessors, unless, indeed, you are prepared to problaim to all the world that Canada has fallen so low that all her public men are alike untrustworthy, and that she possesses no statesmen whom an honest and intelligent man can "monourably support. I have more faith in the future of our country. I do not hold that her public men have all sunk to such a level, and I for one have no fear of the result of an appeal to the verdict of my countrymen, whether our cause be tried before the people of this Dominion, or of the Province of Ontario, or of our own good county of Lennox. GENERAL NEWS. Goods for the Paris Exhibition. -The Hon, Mr. Cartwright and Sir John A. Macdonald,
