FRANK MURPHY

It is one of the glories of British jurisprudence that the prisoner, what ever his crime, is presumed innocent. It is the business of the Crown to prove him guilty. Even a confession of guilt in no way affects the action of the Crown, which proceeds to prove its case by legal evidence.

So carefully are the interests of the prisoner guarded that, whether the case be the stealing of a ham, or the taking of human life, the prisoner is warned against making any incriminating statement. The judge and jury approach the case without bias or prejudice.

The former has no knowledge of the intimate facts of the case. He has not connected with the officers of the Crown. He presides simply to see that nothing but legal testimony is adduced, and to instruct the jury in the law which governs the case under consideration.

Diametrically opposed to this is the French judicial system, which presupposes the guilt of the prisoner, and the genius of which is, by an assumption of intimate knowledge of the details of the crime, to overwhelm the latter with a sense of terror, so that, under the influence, a confession may be extorted. The presiding judge, at the preliminary arraignment assumes the character of prosecutor. He has been informed by the Crown of all the steps which have been taken all the details which have been gathered, and he proceeds to cross-examine the prisoner with a ruthless severity, charging him bluntly with guilt, breaking down his reserve with questions which probe to the innermost heart of the secret which wraps the case in mystery.

Many French journalists and publicists have condemned this system, which finds poignant expression in the sensational case now occupying the public attention in France—the case of a beautiful, fascinating woman, who is charged with murdering her husband and her step-mother. While this system supplies the dramatic element, which is so much decried by the classes which attend court rooms, it seems to Anglo-Saxon notions cruel in its application. While it may bring the truth to light in certain cases, it turns the general sympathy in the direction of the accused, and juries, by a revulsion of feeling, often acquit prisoners whose guilt is manifest.

A Growing Figure
Mr. Lloyd George, judged by his record in the Boer war, is not a mere demagogue, for no public man in Great Britain equalled him in braving unpopularity by criticizing the policy of conquest of South Africa. He faced hostile mobs, had his meetings broken up, and dared to be called by his opponents a traitor. A man of that character cannot be disposed of as a better than washing them as it does not pull them out of shape.

To renovate a shabby silk umbrella, sponge it well with ale or stout. This improves the color wonderfully. If there are any small slits in the cover, put a little black sticking plaster on the under side and press the edges of the tent together. The result is surprising.

First Woman to Fly

The first woman to make, unaided, a flight in an aeroplane is Mme. de la Roche, who at Châlons camp flew for some three hundred yards in her Voisin biplane.

After a run of less than a couple of hundred yards uphill in the direction of the Antoinette shed, the aeroplane rose beautifully into the air, and it was once seen that the aviatress, notwithstanding a wind blowing at the rate of from three to four yards a second, had perfect mastery of her machine. Her first turning was negotiated with ease, though a sudden gust made the machine swerve to rather an acute angle. After turning and getting the wind behind her she developed tremendous speed. A few seconds later the machine darted towards us as though piloted by an experienced hand. She made another splendid circuit of the ground before coming to earth in front of the shed.

"It is infinitely more charming than motoring," she said after the flight. "In mid-air one loses all those disagreeable shocks and jolts which are felt on road. The sight of the ground swiftly running away beneath my feet was exhilarating but I wanted to travel faster."

Asked if she was nervous at the turning, she replied:
"Not in the least! In fact, I found that the jolliest part of the flight. The gusts bothered me when they caught me unawares, and the aeroplane tilted over but I got used to that after the first two corners. Shall I continue? Certainly, I am going to Paris, but I shall be back again, when I intend to do better than I have to-day."

Household Hints

Before sweeping linoleum tie a soft, damp muslin cloth over the brush. This should be tied so as not to crush the hairs of the brush, which should then be used in the usual way. A floor swept in this manner looks beautifully fresh and clean, and does not require frequent washing.

In order to prevent a cauliflower from breaking, tie it in muslin as one would a pudding, and boil gently.

To stop a leak in a bowl or kettle, mix some whiting and soap together into a very thick paste. Put over leakages and allow to set a hour or so.

When flower vases are badly stained, it is a good plan to half fill them with a mixture of salt and vinegar. Shake and also brush well with a jug brush. This will be found to thoroughly cleanse them, and leave them free from all stains.

Cleaning suede gloves, put the gloves on the hand, and rub all over with a mixture of Fuller's earth and alum; then brush off and your gloves will look as good as when new. This is much better than washing them as it does not pull them out of shape.

Weak Women
To weak and ailing women, there is at least one way to help. But with that way, two treatments, must be combined. One is local, one is constitutional, but both are important, both essential.
Dr. Shoop's Night Cure is the local.
Dr. Shoop's Restorative, the Constitutional.
Dr. Shoop's Restorative, the Constitutional, is a topical mucous membrane suppository remedy with Dr. Shoop's Restorative is really an internal treatment. The Restorative restores throughout the entire system, seeking the repair of all nerves, all tissues and all blood elements.
Dr. Shoop's Night Cure, as its name implies, does its work while you sleep. It soothes and inflames mucous surfaces, heals local weaknesses and discharges within the Restorative, ease nervous excitement, gives renewed vigor and ambitious strength, vigor, and energy. Take Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tubule or Liquid—a general tonic to the system. For positive local help, use as well.
