SELLING A SOUL.

By A. R. Hassard.

"I do not want your soul—and yet—no; I want on'y the use of your spiendid intellectual capacities, which you are perishing in this attic, and which, if otherwise applied, might yield you all you could ever desire in gold."

"Pshaw—I hate it—gold—I have no need for money—gold that gleams in the eye, and rusts in the p cket, and weighs down the heart—I want none of it. What I want is beauty, and loveliness and laughter and light—the agonizing sweetness of the flowers, the spirit thrilling ecstacy of the nightingale, the vespers of the zaphyrs, and the litany of the stream. I want poetry and passion, and that fierce electric whirlwind of happiness and joy—that never satisfying desire that lives when all things else have died—that soul-despairing mixture of expectation and delight which we call music—music, that echo of unrealized yarnings—music that transforms a man into a god"

"But you are perishing—you are dreaming—desaming and daing—and writing

The poet eagerly opened the perfumed envelope, and hurried away to write h s acceptance of the invitation to the Faucy Carnival that was to be beld at Madame's house a week from Friday night.

"How beautiful is this waltz," the pretty heiress murmured, as leaning passively on his arm, she followed him around the bril-

"It is beautiful," he replied.

"But it is flaished," she said regretfully, as the music ceased, and her soft and lustrous eyes gazed into his.
"Shall we step out on the veraudah?" he enquired, "the air in here is somewhat op-

"Many a man dags a grave when he marries a wife," he answered. "Besides," he continued, "I have never known any woman in whom all the higher and more in spiring intellectual attributes are to be found." Man ever seeks for something in spiring and exalting, and something that is ever new, and destitute of these. But the women with year hearts and great capacities for inspiring and exalting and receiled women are followed from her door, but her weakness compelled her to give up the struggle, and now he and death had entered together. She hurried away to her room to dress the halloon's motions with great interest for a while, Benny, who was of an interest.

She hurried away to her room to dress for the party and he flung the paper before him into the fire; and as he due so, he looked down the long vista of a fairer and a happier past that was outlined with realistic vividity beyond the dying embers of the ashes in the grate, and saw the haunting faces that were reproduced with starting faces that were reproduced with starting fidelity on the flickering scene before him, and heard the tinkling foot-teps that his pain wrought fancy reshioned coming down the withering sweeter of the golden vales of joy, and caught the expressive cadences of the rustle of the branches of

She found him—her husband—early in the morning as she returned from the pedro party; and he was lying dead on the door step which led up to the attic, where he had spent his happiest days. His face was turned up to the only companions he knew, or cared for—the stars—and a smile on the pa's white lips told her that he had found that we had some the wind, although she might not be able to it that they came to no harm. Throwing off all responsibility in the matt r, she laid her cheek on Benny's curls and went to also herself.

ation and revelation are creatures divine that are alone worth loving?

He did not know what reply she made, nor what starner spell we cast around him, but when she mirmured, "It is growing cid out here? she had, with sweet and thrilling lips already answered, "I wil," to the question which would make two spirits one.

"It is too bid," he murmured, as he stoot irresolutely with the key in his hand, and looked lovingly around the room. It was here that the largest desires and sweetest reminiscences and vanished visions had led his imagination beyond the narrow atticup the stars to dwell where his pleasures age flysh had known no bounds.

The terrified children looked down upon the earth they were leaving fast hebind. As they sailed over the house, grazing the tops of the tall poplar trees that stood at the front gate, they saw the aeronaut and Mr. and Mrs. Hastings run out of the house and look up at them. Mrs. Hastings happened to be looking out of the wildow, and noticing the moving balloon, told the man who had stopped at the house that his balloon was adrit.

In a country home in one of the Western States lived a man and his wife, a lonely pair, who were contented with life except that they had no children. Mrs. Goodman wished that, like her neighbor. she had two lovely young daughters, while Mr. Goodman wished that, like her neighbor. she had two lovely young daughters, while Mr. Goodman often thought how nice it would be if he had a fine stripling of a son like his neighbor Brown's tall lad. He was thinking how helpful such a boy would be to him. one afternoon as he was taking down the bar to let the cattle out of the pasture. Suddenly he became conscious of a gigantic Suddenly he became conscious of a gigantic object hovering above him in the air. It remained stationary for a moment, then moved slowly toward the house.

"A balloon!" he cried excitedly; and see-woman! What will become of the children?

"I think you had better go over and bring then here until the funeral is over," answered her husband. "The house is in a dreadful state, and there is absolutely nothing to eat in the larder. The children must be looked after by some one. What's 'everybody's business is nobody's business' in cases of this kind"; and the good man proceeded to butter his muffin with his teaspoon in his abstraction.

"Vory well," replied motherly Mrs. Hastings, as she handed him a knife.

When she arrived at the abode of poverty she found that the undertaker had p ecoded ther. The two woe-begone little orphans were huddled together in a corner of the kitchen, the very picture of forfornness and misery.
