The New Encyclopaedia Britannica is protected by copyright in every civilized country in the world

When the 9th (the last completely new) edition of the Britannica was published, 1875-89, the state of the copyright laws in the United States were such as to afford no protection to works which had primarily been issued in another country. The consequence was that, in common with other English books, the Encyclopaedia Britannica was "pirated"; and garbled and mutilated reprints purporting to be the real work were foisted wholesale on an unsuspecting public; so that the English publishers who had sunk a large sum of money in preparing and issuing the 9th edition were robbed of the just rewards of their enterprise. The United States copyright law of 1908 now affords protection to foreign publishers. By copyrighting the work in every civilized country in the world, the Cambridge University Press protect the public from spurious and incomplete reproductions of a work of which the traditions are among the highest in the world of letters and scholarship.

The new (Eleventh) Edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica is a fresh and original survey of Human Thought, Learning, and Achievement in 1910, and complete and authoritative exposition of knowledge. It consists of 28 Volumes and Index, comprising 27,000 pages and 40,000 articles, and will supersede and displace previous editions and unauthorized and garbled American reprints.
