A German floating mine has wrecked the Grimsby team trawler Uxbridge and injured three members of the crew. The Uxbridge was fishing in the North Sea and the net was being hauled in when it was, discovered that a mine had become entangled in it. As the net reached the ship's side, the mine burst with disastrous effect, the wheelhouse and bridge being wrecked, and the trawler's hull stove in. The chief engineer, who was on duty below, had his legs badly injured, but managed to crawl to the deck. The mate was flung across the deck by the explosion, and badly bruised and shaken, while the cook was injured about the arms and chest by flying fragments. All nine hands suffered from shock, but they succeeded in launching their little boat and getting clear of the Uxbridge, which sank in ten minutes after the explosion The men were only in the boat for about half an hour, being sighted by a Boston trawler which picked them up and landed them at Boston,
