The Famous Fruit Medicines

M. DE ROCHON
Rochon, P.O. March 2nd, 1915.
"I have received the most wonderful benefit from taking 'Fruit-a-tives'. I suffered for years from Rheumatism and change of life, and I took every remedy obtainable, without any good results. I heard of 'Fruit-a-tives' and gave it a trial and it was the only medicine that really did me good. Now I am entirely well; the Rheumatism has disappeared and the terrible pains in my body are all gone. I am exceedingly grateful to 'Fruit-a-tives' for such relief, and I hope that others who suffer from such distressing diseases will try 'Fruit-a-tives' and get well."

MADAME ISABELLE ROCHON.
The marvelous work that 'Fruit-a-tives' is doing, in overcoming disease and healing the sick, is winning the admiration of thousands and thousands. 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

A New Year Creed.

Let me be a little kinder,
Let me be a little blinder,
To the faults of those about me,
Let me praise a little more;
Let me be, when I am weary,
Just a little bit more cheery,
Let me serve a little better
Those that I am striving for.
Let me be a little braver
Let me strive a little harder
To be all that I should be;
Let me be a little meeker
With the brother that is weaker,
Let me think more of my neighbor
And a little less of me.
Let me be a little sweeter,
Make my life a bit completer,
By doing what I should do,
Every minute of the day;
Let me toil without complaining,
Not a humble task disdainning,
Let me face the summons calmly
When Death beckons me away.
—Detroit Free Press.

'God holds the key of all unknown,
And I am glad;
If other hands should hold the key,
Or, if He trusted it to me,
I might be sad.'

'Not if It Were My Boy.'

The late Horace Mann, the eminent educator, delivered an address at the opening of some reformatory institution for boys, during which he remarked that if only one boy was saved from rum it would pay for all the cost and care and labor of establishing such an institution as that. After the exercises Mr. Mann was asked:
"Did you not feel that a little when you said that all that expense and labor would be repaid if it only saved one boy?"
"Not if it was my boy," was the solemn and convincing reply.

Ah! there is a wonderful value about 'my boy.' Other boys may be rude and rough; other boys may seem to require more pains and labor than they will repay; other boys may be left to drift unguided for to the ruin that is so near at hand; but 'my boy'—it was worth the toil of a lifetime and the lavish wealth of the world to save him from temporal and eternal ruin. We would go the world around to save him from peril, and would bless every hand that was stretched out to give him help or welcome. And yet every poor, wandering, homeless, outcast man is one whom some fond mother called 'my boy.' Every lost woman, sunken in the depths of sin, was somebody's daughter in her days of childish innocence. Today some body's son is a hungry outcast pressed to the very verge of crime and sin. Today somebody's daughter is a weary helpless wanderer, driven by necessity to the paths that lead to death. Shall we shrink from labor, shall we hesitate at cost when the work before us is the salvation of a soul? Not if it is 'my boy,' not if we have the love of him who gave His life to save the lost.

TYPEWRITER BUREAU NEEDS LITTLE MONEY

Young Lady With Fifty Dollars Makes Good—Pleasant and Instructive Work

I always had a wish to possess a little business of my own, but my capital was insufficient to commence anything that required a big and costly stock, writes an ambitious young lady. One day, however, I hit upon a brilliant idea, and I promptly carried it out. In short, I started a typewriter bureau. Of course, it's not a new idea, but by the employment of up-to-date business principles I achieved a great success. At last I had definitely decided to embark on the venture there were several matters which presented themselves to my mind deserving of serious consideration. In the first place, it occurred to me that if I conducted the business from my private home it would at once assume an amateurish effect. So I looked about for a suitable office. There were plenty of offices to be let; but the rents! Eventually, however, I managed to secure a room on the top floor of a building for $125 a week. Well, having arranged about the office, I was then faced with the problem of letting the public know that I was there. I commenced by having a card printed, and, after placing it in a frame, I hung it in the doorway. This idea was a most valuable one to secure custom from people who visited other offices in the building. I next inserted small "prepaid" advertisements in the papers. I took a series of announcements to save my time and get the little reductions given for such. I also advertised in my local theatre programme. I had some notepaper and envelopes printed, and bought a quantity of typewriter paper, duplicating paper, and sundry office items. The necessary furniture—a couple of tables, a chest, a few chairs, and the like—I "borrowed" from home. On the day that I commenced business I drafted a pointed circular letter stating my method of business and the attention given to accuracy, etc. This I duplicated and despatched to the most likely addresses in the town. I also prepared a neat scale of charges to give or send to inquirers.

Hard Going at First
At first things were very slow, and at the end of the first week I must confess a little spark of doubt had arisen in my mind. But I determined to stick to my guns. After that first discouraging fortnight things looked up considerably, and not only did I secure most of the commissions from local business firms, but also from all parts of the country.

The remuneration left me a nice margin of profit but I always said that it was worth it because I took great care with every job, whether it was small or large. I charged 25 cents a thousand words for all general work, 35 cents for plays and legal work, and 5 cents per folio of seventy-two words for poetry.

Profit on the Side
In addition to these sources of revenue, though, I held an agency for various things—stationery, typewriter supplies, insurance, and so on—which not only helped considerably to swell the exchequer but also enabled me to buy my own stuff at reduced charges. Soon after I started I commenced to teach pupils, and while they were receiving a sound training they also were able to do for me most useful work. Especially was this so in the direction of "running off" duplicator copies.

My initial outlay was well within fifty dollars, but this amount could be greatly reduced if one possesses a typewriter and duplicator. I did not, so these items cost me, second-hand, about thirty dollars. Advertising is a most essential factor, at any rate, until an extensive clientele is worked up; but, on account of the fact that commissions are seldom for very heavy amounts, it is unwise to go beyond the "prepaid" columns, which, moreover, replies should be carefully watched, and those journals which are not paying should be left alone for a time. And it is worthy of notice that the office should always have a smart appearance, for it is an established fact that the observant customer learns much from "outward appearances."

A Health Bulletin
Full many a man has lost his head through eating soggy, half cooked bread.
And he who would his kidneys save Had best avoid the whisky wave.
Your heart and nervous system, too, Are surely worth a heap of you.
Why prod' them then with nicotine And make believe all is serene?
In tobacco heart there is no wealth, And what is more, there's weakened health.

The Language of a Face.
A furrowed countenance there was that gleamed
With holy light,
Reflecting there a loving soul, redeemed
By virtue's might;
Each wrinkle was a little tale that told
The sweet content
Of golden thoughts and worthy deeds that mold
A life well spent.

TURKS HALF-HEARTED

Rulers Plundering, Capital Starving and Recruits Dying, For Germany

A. Robert Mounster, literary editor of "Judge," New York, who has just returned from Constantinople, writes as follows: In more ways than one Constantinople showed itself the capital of a country that is fighting without any heart for necessary reforms and for a nation capable of with whom the Turks have nothing in common. Business is bad, food is dearer, and bread is scarce. No shopkeeper dare violate the police order that all flags should be hung out in celebration of a great victory. What was the victory? Ten thousand British soldiers had been killed—so the official report said. The poorer classes of people hearing of victory after victory argue simply, but effectively, "If our brothers are victorious, why don't our husbands, our sons come back to us? Why are there so many wounded? Why don't we have all the bread we want?"

Young Turk leaders who are responsible for the present state of affairs can talk for hours about the benefits that their country has derived and the glorious future that will be hers through their sacrifices. Besides, I have yet to hear of any influential member of the present regime who has not been lining his pockets well for gold for many days in Constantinople or for rainy days to come in Asia Minor. Whatever happens they do not intend to lose material possessions or offices they have held. The disappearance of public money is so well known that rarely is a Turk to be seen putting anything into the "For the National Defence" cans, which are shoved under one's nose in the street or street cars, in restaurants, in public gardens, everywhere but in the home. Nor is the Turkish public any longer contributing freely to the funds of the Red Crescent.

The recruit in the raw comes from the interior of Asia Minor or from far-off Arabia in his picturesque garments, puts on a uniform and the peculiar helmet that has replaced the fez, receives an uncertain amount of military training, and goes when needed to the front, usually by a transport ship carrying also ammunition and rifles that have been made by German workmen in the Turkish capital, or shipped across Rumania and Bulgaria as "planes," "agricultural machinery," and the like.

Racing and Canada's War

The statement that racing is necessary for the improvement of the breed of horses is good or argument in normal circumstances. Advanced now as a reason why the tracks should not close during the war, it is a pretence that deceives nobody. How could the breed of horse be affected one way or the other by the cancelling of a season's or two season's racing fixtures?

Not much more respectable as an argument is the plea that we need racing and other sports and amusements so that the public may be beguiled from the gloom and sorrow caused by the war. It ought to be nobody's duty at the present time to cause the public to take a more cheerful or optimistic view of the situation. On the contrary, the duty is for us to be rather more than less impressed by the terrible nature of the struggle in which this country is engaged, and with the necessity for making greater efforts and harder sacrifices to ensure ultimate victory. If racing has the effect of distracting the attention of thousands of young Canadians from a contemplation of their own duties and responsibilities in this struggle, nothing further need be said against it.—Toronto Mail and Empire.

No Dum-dum Bullets

The United States is the only nation now remaining outside the operation of the declaration barring the use of dum-dum bullets. These bullets are not used, however, in the United States army. Great Britain, having at first refused to sign the convention, and reserving the right to use dum-dum bullets "only against uncivilized peoples," acceded to the declaration at the Second Hague Conference, in 1907. Dum-dum bullets were used in Egypt in 1896, but not in the Boer War. Great Britain, under whose authority they were first manufactured at the Dum-dum Arsenal in Bengal, India, urged the right to use them in warfare with "uncivilized peoples" because ordinary lead-shot bullets did not secure "sufficient stopping power" in fighting with fanatic tribes.

Ancient History of Kilts
The Scottish kilt, as an article of dress, dates back to historic times, and was originally, as far as can be figured out, merely a plaid blanket, worn about the shoulders, with one end gathered about the loins in cold weather. The mountaineers of the Balkans wear the kilt, and students say that the soldiers of the Assyrian kings wore a costume very closely akin to the kilt of Scotland.

Keeping Resolutions.
To make a resolution and keep it is hard. But to make one and break it is demoralizing. It is easier to keep a resolution if it is made a few days before putting into effect. Every nerve of the body seems to brace itself for the abstinence. To break off an objectionable habit without any preparation is a mistake. Denial may be easy for a few hours' but the grip almost invariably returns.

A Weak Heart.
When the heart is weak or irregular, when the blood is thin and watery, remember the blood-forming qualities of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and by its use flood the system with rich, vitalizing blood. This is nature's way of curing weakness and disease. It is the only way to ensure lasting benefits.

Children love individual possessions, and often a plant of flowers will add greatly to the appearance of the child's corner and at the same time will be a source of pride.

The object of pain seems to be to give warning that something is wrong in the human system. For this reason, when you have a headache, for instance, you should honestly seek for the cause.

Headache is not a disease in itself, but rather a symptom. If you find other indications that the nervous system is exhausted—if you are restless, nervous, sleepless and irritable—you may rightly suppose that to be the cause of the headache.

The headache warns you that with neglect of the nervous system you later expect nervous prostration, locomotor ataxia, or some form of paralysis. Wisdom suggests the use of such treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to build up the system, and thereby remove the cause of the headache, as well as prevent more serious troubles.

The use of headache powders is not only a dangerous practice, but the shock to the system of drugs which are so powerful and poisonous as to immediately stop pain is most harmful. The relief is merely temporary, and with this danger signal removed the disease which caused the headache continues to develop until results are serious. The natural is, when you have headaches or pain of any kind look for the cause and remove it.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is not intended as a mere relief for headache. It cures by supplying the ingredients from which nature rebuilds and revitalizes the wasted nerve cells. Some patience is required for this reconstructive process, but the results are wonderfully satisfying, because they are both thorough and lasting.

If you would be freed from headaches, as was the writer of the letter quoted above, get Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to the test. Working, as it does, hand in hand with Nature, it can no more fail than can other of Nature's laws.

Every child needs some corner to call his own. No matter how young he may be, no matter how restricted the home space, he should have some refuge from adult interference. Few city houses and apartment houses are built so that a whole room can be turned over to a child for his exclusive use.

It is often possible however, to give the child a corner in the living-room or one of the sleeping rooms to which to keep his toys and where he may play undisturbed.

The result of such a scheme is that, instead of the toys being scattered all over the house, they are assembled in one spot, and the mother's work is lessened.

Low shelves, arranged like built-in bookcases, and an excellent storage place for playthings; it is imperative that the toys be arranged in an orderly manner so the child can find a particular toy he wishes without disturbing the rest.

By tacking a strip of oiled paper the color of the paper along the wall it is possible to protect the paper from finger marks, and at the same time to offer a place for the child to pin his drawings or the pictures that appeal to his taste.

Europe—Our war is terrible. I know of a colonel who commanded a regiment of 1,000 privates and lost half of them in one battle. Mexican—That's nothing compared with our war. I knew of one private who was commanded by 1,000 generals and lost 750 of them in one battle.—Puck.
