

ROYAL YEAST CAKES
MAKE PERFECT BREAD

Bread made in the home with Royal yeast will keep fresh and moist longer than that made with any other. Food Scientists claim that there is more nourishment in a pound of good home made bread than in a pound of meat. Consider the difference in cost.

place must be extremely salubrious, for it has grown a fine specimen in you," he added, as he looked at Rath's powerful form. "I'd rather have you on my side in a row than on the other; but you are a bit too thin, aren't you?"

Rath nodded and glanced carelessly at his arm, upon which the muscles stood out like those on a greyhound.

"Yes; I've got thin lately," he said. "And a little off colour, too. I should say," said Edward. "Excuse my noticing it; but I've some quinine in my pocket, and I should advise you to take a dose or two. Was it fever?"

"I suppose so," said Rath, gravely, as he thought of the weeks of agony he had endured.

He stirred the fire with his foot as he answered, and the wood started into a blaze and lit up his careworn face. Edward, who had still been regarding him with admiration and interest, started, and took his pipe from his mouth.

"I beg your pardon," he said. "What did you say your name was?"

"Rath Rayne," replied Rath; and Edward repeated it thoughtfully once or twice.

"No; I don't remember it. I don't think I've ever heard it before; and yet, just now, as you stood with the freight full on your face, I could have sworn I'd seen you, or someone remarkably like you, before. Where do your people come from?"

"I don't know," replied Rath, quite simply, as if there was nothing extraordinary in his ignorance. "I don't know anything about them. My father never told me."

Edward was too courteous and discreet to remark upon this rather startling statement; and, after a pause, Rath said:

"Why do you ask?"

"Because I might have met, known, some of them. You see, England's not a very large place, and the gentry hold together pretty much, and generally know one another. Of course, my dear fellow, I know that you are a gentleman; a blind man could see that."

Rath nodded with rather staggering calmness.

"Yes, my father was a gentleman, and taught me to be one," he said, as if it were a matter of course.

"And I thought I might be able to trace the resemblance to someone I know," said Bryan.

Rath shook his head.

"I can't help you," he said, with his usual gravity. "I know nothing of the people to whom I and my father belong. It does not matter."

"Not in the least," Edward assented, promptly, and with a slight embarrassment; for it naturally occurred to him that this young giant's father must have good—or, rather, bad—excuse for concealing his antecedents from his son. He at once changed the subject by remarking: "I see you have some books here; and, by George! you need them in the long winter evenings."

"Yes. Won't you look at them?" said Rath, and he added with his usual conscientiousness: "I am just learning to read."

To cover his surprise, Edward rose and took some of the volumes from the shelf.

"Been too busy to learn. I suppose," he said, as casually as he could. "You've got some useful books here, though there are some of them pretty old and out of date. Oh! here's an old friend of mine!" he exclaimed, as he came to the work on heraldry. He turned it over and noticed, as Stella had done, that the fly-leaf, upon which the name of the owner is generally written, had been torn out. "Jolly interesting old book!" he said. "I've spent many a pleasant half hour over it. By George!" he broke off, looking up suddenly. "Now I know where I've seen someone like you! Did you ever hear the name of Rathion?"

Rath shook his head.

"No, never!" he replied.

Edward Bryan looked at the Rathion arms, which had caught his eye, and seemed puzzled for a moment; then he put the book aside and began to talk of his colonial experiences, and to ask questions as to Rath's work and pursuits.

The two young men sat up talking for some hours; indeed, until Edward Bryan began to nod in his chair, then they went to bed.

When he woke in the morning, Rath found that his new chum had already risen, and was busy making up the fire. Edward looked round at him and nodded.

"Good-morning!" he said, in his pleasant voice. "I got up as quietly as I could, because you didn't seem to have had much of a night, and I didn't want to disturb you. I forgot to give you that dose of quinine last night; take it now; here it is. It will stop that talking in your sleep."

Rath looked up from the morsel of grey powder.

"Did I talk in my sleep?" he said, rather sternly. "What did I say?"

"Pon my word, I was too sleepy to hear," replied Edward lightly. "Whatever it was, it wasn't intended for my ears, you know, so I didn't trouble to listen."

"I beg your pardon," said Rath, gravely.

Rath was rather quiet during the breakfast, for he was thinking of his late companion—Stella—at that and his other meals, but when he conducted Edward Bryan round the farm and clearing, he talked more freely, and the two men planned out their work.

Rath found that his new helpmate had only done himself justice in declaring that he could turn his hand to most things, and before many days had passed, Edward Bryan's frankness and good temper won upon Rath's natural reserve. But not one word did he say of Stella, though his reticence rose from a reluctance to widen the wound which had not, and never would be, closed in his heart.

Edward Bryan, for his part, very soon grew fond of his strange companion, whose singular history and solitary life had a fascination for him. The two young men talked when they were working together, and in the long evenings, and Rath would listen with absorbed gravity to Bryan's stories of his home-life at Shorn Court, to descriptions of the father and mother who loved and were loved by him; but very often the two would sit and stare sleepily at the fire; and Rath would be dreaming of his lost Stella, and Edward would be dwelling upon Lady Mary, and wondering what was happening to her, and whether she had forgotten him; no, not forgotten him, for he knew that Mary was not one to forget the man who had won her heart.

One day Bryan had gone off in search of game, and Rath had remained at home sawing logs. He had finished work for the day, and was cooking the dinner when he heard Edward's step. He was back before his time, and Rath looked round to

Tiring, Ceaseless Back-Ache Can be Rubbed Away To-Night

Relief is Almost Unfailing from Even the First Application.

RUB ON NERVILINE.

Cold has a vicious way of finding out aching muscles or weak joints. How often pain settles in the back, causing inflammation and excruciating soreness. Stiffness and aching all over follows.

An application of Nerviline at the start gives immediate relief and prevents worse trouble.

When the pain is very acute, Nerviline has a chance to show its wonderful penetrating and pain-subduing power. It strikes in deeply, and its strike-in-deep quality proves its superiority to feeble remedies. Then this goodness is magnified by its strength, easily five times greater than most liniments.

Surely so powerful and curative a liniment as Nerviline offers perfect security against pain.

Nerviline is the only guaranteed pain remedy sold in Canada. Forty years of success in many countries warrants its manufacturers saying: If it does not relieve, get your money back.

No curable pain, not even neuralgia, lumbago, sciatica or rheumatism can resist the magic power of Nerviline. Try it to-day. Rub it on your tired back, let it ease your sore muscles, let it take the swelling and stiffness out of your joints. It's a marvel—thousands say so that use Nerviline.

The large 50c. family size bottle of Nerviline is more economical than the 25c. trial size. Buy the larger size to-day. Sold by dealers everywhere.

Use "Tiz" for Sore, Tired, Aching Feet

"TIZ" is just wonderful for burning, swollen, sweaty, calloused feet and corns.

"TIZ" makes my feet smaller.

Good-bye sore feet, burning feet, swollen feet, smelly feet, tired feet. Good-bye corns, callouses, bunions and raw spots. No more shoe tightness, no more limping with pain or drawing up your face in agony. "TIZ" is magical, acts right off. "TIZ" draws out all the poisonous exudations which puff up the feet—the only remedy that does. Use "TIZ" and wear smaller shoes. Ah! how comfortable your feet will feel. "TIZ" is a delight. "TIZ" is harmless.

Get a 25 cent box of "TIZ" now at any druggist or department store. Don't suffer. Have good feet, glad feet, feet that never swell, never hurt, never get tired. A year's foot comfort guaranteed or money refunded.

inquire the reason; but the question was checked upon his lips, and he regarded Edward in silence, for Bryan's face was white, his lips trembling, and his manner agitated.

"Rath!" he exclaimed, breathlessly. "I've—I've got a surprise for you. I have made a discovery, a wonderful discovery! Be prepared for a shock!"

"What is it?" asked Rath in his grave fashion.

Bryan flung himself into a chair, and leaning his elbows on the table, stared at Rath as if he were looking through him.

"You know the hill behind the north cliff, Rath? Well, I was crouching there behind the scrub, waiting for some wild fowl to pass; my foot slipped and knocked out a piece of rock—stone. I picked it up absently, and—and, Rath, my boy, our fortune is made! It wasn't rock or gravel, but a nugget! Gold, my boy, gold!"

He let the nugget fall on the table with a thud, and pointing to it, regarded Rath with sparkling eyes.

"That's gold, Rath—gold! Do you hear? And there's plenty more of it—oceans! Ho, won't earth I've managed to keep my head, why I haven't gone stark staring mad, I don't know. I wanted to shout and—and jump! I'm afraid I did shout a bit, and I've come home walking on air. Don't you understand? Are you too astounded to speak? It's gold, I tell you, gold! Take it in your hand, examine it, weigh it! Isn't it a stunner? And there's more—more where that came from!"

Rath took up the nugget and looked at it absently. Then he laid it down again, and said, coolly:

"Yes, I know."

"You—know—knew!" gasped Edward Bryan, staring at him.

Rath nodded, and turned to his stew-pot again.

"Yes. We—I discovered it months ago," he said, quietly.

"You discovered it, and you said nothing about it!" exclaimed Edward. "Why on earth not?"

Amusements.

The Casino Theatre was well filled last night and the two big feature pictures were very much enjoyed by the large audience. "Classmates" the famous American military story adapted from the well-known play, is all that has been claimed for it as a truly great picture-play, while the beautiful domestic story, entitled "Harding's Heritage" rounded out a most enjoyable programme. Both these features will be seen for the last time to-night. On Monday the Kalem masterpiece "The Boer War"—in five parts will be the attraction.

"WHEN THE MAPLE LEAVES WERE FALLING."
Mr. Delmonico songs "When the Maple Leaves Were Falling" in double voice and also Mrs. Clark got 2nd prize for singing "When the Sunset turns the Ocean's Blue to Gold"; a young gentleman for dancing a horn-pipe got 3rd prize $2.00. The children's competition to-day promises to be big, for there are further names, and three prizes given. There is in preparation a grand production Potted Pantomime. "There was an old woman who lived in a Shoe," with Jack, Marie and Bonnie Rossley. Mr. Ballard Brown and Miss Madge Locke, and the talented Pantomime girls, with the finest orchestra in the city.

"OURS" IN THE WEST END.
There was as usual a crowded house at the cosy little theatre last night. The pictures were all new and the two little singers were well applauded. The little house in the West is the favorite place of amusement, always clean, comfortable and well managed.
