Ladies who desire to see the modern husband should attend the Grand to-morrow evening. "A Modern Husband," as portrayed by that clever author, Prof. Hennequin, is a very funny character and decidedly exaggerated. He is first represented as a man of science, whose whole mind and being is absorbed in abstruse subjects, chiefly in the invention of a powerful exposive. He succeeds, makes his fortune, and becomes suddenly transformed into a gay man of the world. These extremes afford score for an unlimited amount of humor. This farcical comedy is interpreted by a first-class company, and the fact that the occasion is the annual benefit to the local management should pack the house.

The Ottawa correspondent of the St.
John (N. B.) Sun says: Mr. Lister got the floor and brought up the long-delayed, though oft-expected matter, the impeachment of Judge Elliot. He made an able and elequent speech, reviewing the whole case, and asked the House to refer the charge to a commission to investigate.
Mr. Lister sits directly across the floor from the Hon. Mr. Carling, who holds the seat for London, and he addressed his remarks to that gentleman, eyeing him all the time. Mr. Carling had to maintain his seat, but his discomfort was very evident. Under the scathing criticism of Mr. Edgar he winced and fidgeted uneasily in his seat. For the greater portion of the time he kept his eyes on his desk and several times tried to read a blue book, but it was evident that he could not concentrate his thoughts on it. His face was flushed and his whole demeanor one of great discomfort. Once or twice he tried to speak to a passing member, but even then he was ill at ease and his colleagues did not stay long with and his colleagues did not stay long with him. Mr. Lister in making his charges, said he took all responsibility and was prepared to prove that the judge had acted in a most partisan manner, and had written editorial and other articles in the London Free Press against the Liberals. In closing he charged that Mr. Carling occupied the seat which rightfully belonged to Mr. Hyman, by virtue of Judge Elliot and by virtue of bad votes. He charged that the Conservatives of London knew beforehand what the legal decision of Judge Elliot would be, and said if these charges were true the judge had degraded his high position and forever destroyed his usefulness. and his colleagues did not stay long with
