"If you must go, do us one service first," she says. "Do you see that rose?"—a rather unkempt and straggling specimen of its kind that trails in unadmired disorder just outside the door. "It has baffled me many a time, but you are tall, oh, taller than most; will you lift those awkward tendrils and press them back into shape?"

She is smiling divinely at him, a moved by it, and refusing to return it, steps outside, and with a decidedly unwilling air proceeds to lift the drooping tendrils and reduce them to order Griselda, naturally a girl of great resource, seizes the opportunity she has herself provided. Catching Vera's arm she draws her back out of sight. "Now's your time!" she says. "Say something. Do something. It doesn't matter what, but for Heaven's sake smooth him down one way or another! If you don't you'll have the old man lown upon us like-

But The tendrils have indeed been reduced to order; the roses are blooming new corous tranquility. "You ought to be a gardener," she says with quite a little glow of admirtion. "There, you've done enough. I can circumvent this little tendril whilst you say good-bye to Vera. I am so afraid you will miss your train, and all on my

Dysart, who has received her rap-tures rather grimly, drops the tendril in question, and returns to the sum-mer house with all the manner of one in mad haste to be gone. It is merely himself, that he must first say a chillingly courteous word or two of farewell to the girl who has openly declar ed towards him such an undying ani-

"I am afraid," says Vera, speaking with cold precision, as one delivering herself of an unloved lesson, "that you are going away thus abruptly because of what you heard me say this morn-

You are right. That is why I am going," replies Dysart calmly.
"Yes?" in a chilling tone and with faintly-lifted brows. "I regret exceedingly that I should have so unfortun ately offended you, but to go for that —It all sounds a little trivial, don't you

"Not my going, I think. I don't see how I can do otherwise. Why should I make you uncomfortable? But you may have only seen for an hour or two, and who in those hours—" He "Did I make myself so specially objectionable?" demands he abruptly, turning to her with something | without the substance; no that is surely anger, but as surely entreaty, in his eyes.

Would you have me believe you did not really mean what you said?'
"I would not have you believe anything," returns she haughtily. "Why should I?" Her eyes are looking straight past him to where a glowing rose-bush stands, but I doubt if its glories are justly appreciated by her just now. Something akin to passionate dislike toward the man who ha thus brought her steadily to book is making her pulse throb. "I only think it a pity that you should curtail your visit to your father because of a chance remark of mine that cannot possibly affect you in any way.

"Why, indeed!" He regards her absently, as if trying to work out in his own mind the answer fo this question, and then, suddenly.

"Nevertheless. I do care," he says, with a touch of vehemence. "It is the injustice of it to which I object. You had evidently determined beforehand to show me no grace. I defy you to deny it! Come, can you?"

Miss Dysart is silent. The very impetuosity of his accusation has deadened her power to reply, and besides, is there not truth in it? Had she not prejudged?"

How much her grace is altered on the sudden?

How long her face is drawn! How pale she looks!

"They told me I should find you here," he says, speaking to Vera. "I have come to say good-bye."

"But surely you are not going so soon! not before dinner, not tonight!" cries Griselda, thunderstruck by this solution of their difficulty, and a little sorry too. Surely, they have been somewhat unkind to him. She has accepted her sister's crime as her own, and after all, what had he done? She

NO SECRET.

There is no secret about Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil. The label tells the whole story. There is a knack in making it. The only secret about it is the secret of its success.

This year, when cod liver oil is very scarce and high all kinds of cheap, inferior oils are used to take its place, and all sorts of things presented as substitutes. Think of petroleum being taken as a substitute for cod liver oil! -too absurd. Think of the so-called wines, extracts and cordials of cod liver oil! -they are simply the shadow

Those who waited, however, to witness the match were well-repaid, for it was fast throughout, both teams working hard for the big end of the score. The combination of the visitors was splendid, especially between McCollum and Sweitzer, and this is what undoubtedly won the game for them. McCollum played a brilliant game, scoring 4 of the 5 goals. David-son also checked and lifted well, and Keller kept many shots from counting. For the home team, Carrothers was one of the stars. On the line he worked hard, and when he took Ev-

FEW JOCKEYS OUT OF THE ORDINARY

They Are in Big Demand, and Are Being Offered Enormous Salaries.

DEMAND FOR GOOD JOCKEYS. No other line of work offers the op-portunity of earning a large salary in a short time such as is afforded in the field of racetrack jockeys. The extra-ordinary earnings of successful joc-keys have frequently been comment-ed upon. Some of them earn an income greater than that of the President of the United States. It is a sing-ular that with such constant demand for this peculiar kind of talent the supply has not grown more than it has. For years jockeys have been Arken, S. C., this week. Mr. Whitney has. For years jockeys have been earning enormous wages, but the number of them—that is, of competent ones—does not keep pace with the demand. Recently there has been extravagant bidding for the services of three boys now riding at the New Orleans meeting, and it is safe to say that the doctor himself has gathered in a few more dollars for the them is against Reach, Rogers & Co., which will be a test case to determine whether the old owners are liable for damages and to what extent. It appears that the lawyers would rather have it that way, for they believe they are stronger and one of them. none of these boys earned $10 a week.
One of them has just been signed at a $10,000 salary by one man, who merely has a call on the boy's services when he needs him, the lad being free to ride for others at other times, thereby swelling his income two or three fold. Another of the boys is in such demand that it is alleged $30,000 was refused for first call on his services.

It seems extraordinary that good jocrefused for first call on his services.

It seems extraordinary that good jockeys do not develop more rapidly. Experience has shown that no particular stock of intelligence is required to make a successful rider. While some of the leading jockeys are fairly well educated other boys equally successful are ignorant. It is generally conceded that one of the main essentials to success in the saddle is confidence, a stock in trade by the way, that ena stock in trade, by the way, that en-ters largely into triumph in any line of athletics or even of business. Not only do boys not attract attention un-til they begin to win but they do not until flushed with victory. It is quite likely that boys of good ability are frequently kept in the background because luck is not with them, and they do not happen to win rather than do not ride well enough to win. Likewise many boys win largely through good fortune and thereby hasten on to success and fame on the wings of good luck. But for all that it is odd that with the great demand there is for or-dinarily good boys there are so few riders out of the ordinary.
