drel was held in Temperance hall yesterday morning. George Carrett occupied the the chair. Fourteen new members were initiated. D. J. O'Danochue then addressed the meeting, when he was received with applause. He spoke for some time on the benefit of being united to ether. He believed that their demands were just and considered the boses were showing a bad spirit in not agreeing to the compromise which the men offered. He said that all the organized trades sympathized with the union, and if necessary would give them pecuniary as men offered. He saw that the union, and if necessary would give them pecuniary assistance. He considered that the press with one exception had treated them well in giving impartial aports of their meetings. Mr. Moore, president of the carpenters union, also made a few remarks in which he said that he regretted that the painters had come out on strske while the carpenters were out. He encouraged them to stand fast and not give in. He was sorry that he had to leave them, but he wanted to see some of the carpenters off who were leaving for Manistoba.

Mr. Carter, secretary of the painters' union, said that they gave ample notice to the boss painters that they would require an advance of wages after the 15th April, and he had not heard from any employer that they had not given sufficient notice. There was no use saying they were not just in their demand when they were working for 17d cents as hour. While they had treated the bosses with every respect, a treated the bosses with every respect, a lew of the bosses had treated some of names. There was not a boss in the city of Toronto who has built his house out of his own labor, but out of the labor of his men. (Hear, hear.) He knew employers who saved over and above their expenses $2000 to $3000 a year, and he knew some who save from $5000 to $6000 a year. What does the workingmen save? Not a single dollar; but after the winter was over What does the warminghes wingle dollar; but after the winter was over they generally had a debt to pay off. (Hear, hear.) They should rise great-cries of shame against such a state of affairs. A mean attempt had been mrde to coerce an employer to retract his action in granting the increase of wages. The mea said that they would leave and join the beys but their employer told them to remain at work, that he would grant the increase. Five out of the twelve men who signed an agreement with one of the bosses to work for a certain rate left yesterday morning and came down to join the union. The picketing committee went to the house picketing committee went to the house where the other six men were working and reasoned with them. They were all initiated in the house. There is only one man that signed the agreement at work. They then proceeded to St. Luke's church, the man all consented and the agreement.

At their regular meeting there was not so large an attendance of carpenters as Mr. Moore said he had received a letter Mr. Moore said he had received a letter from the mayor in the morning, in which the mayor stated that he was sorry his efforts to secure amicable settlement had proved in effectual. He read the resolution of the employers stating that they would not give more than two and a half cents per hour of an advance. This, he claimed, confirmed what he had before asserted, and what had been challenged.

D. J. O'Donohue addressed the carp ters briefly. He advised them not to subters briefly. He advised them not to submit to dictation from the bosses in the matter of wages. He advised all who could possibly do so to leave the city, and if necessary the Dominion, to get wages upon which they could live. He thought it would be better for the carpenters to hold their meetings without admitting the press. The bosses would not allow the press to their meetings and by the men allowing the press to their meetings it put a cue in the hands of the bosses with which to work against the men's interest.

The chairman said he could persive the situation of the employers The chairman said he could perceive the situation of the employers in the recent steps they had taken. It was the leading bosses that laid down regulations for the others and the "organized intimidation" was by one part of the employers over the remainder. The treasure of the larger employers was what tyranny of the larger employers was what hindered many of the others from engaging the carpenters at the rate of wages asked. There was no man who need be in want. They were independent of the employers.

with a friend who had said to him that he thought $2 50 a day was good wages. This thought $2 50 a day was good wages. This observation led the speaker to make a calculation of what the wages and expenses of living were He would show the meeting a fair statement, and help them to understand how they had found it so difficult to live at the wages they had been getting. A set of tools, which was not very complete at that, cost the carpenter about $80, to begin with; and they would only be kept up at a further outlay of about $20 a year, in the shape of interest, replacing, and wear and tear. If there were 1000 carpenters in the city they represented some $80,000 worth of tools. Further calculations went on to show the Further calculations went on to show the value of other tradespeople in the city where such a number of workmen were engaged.

A SITUATION FOR A DOG.

How. George Wright Sacrificed His Pos ition in Preference to Submitting to an Injustice

On May 6 next Mr. George Wright, the nggageman at the city hall depot of the Northern railway, would have been ourteen years in the service of that com. oany had it not been that the other day he elinquished his position in preference to suffering an injustice at the hands of Suprintendent Webster. During all these years Mr. Wright has enjoyed the confi dence of the officials of the road. That an injustice has been done him will be seen by the following, which is supplied by him-

March 18 last Robert Bailey, a drover, I eft Meaford and had his two trunks and a collie dog checked for Avening, on the Hamilton and Northwestern railway. When the transfer was made at Collingwood the trunks were sent to Cookstown and the dog came on to Torouto, where it arrived on the regular train. Mr. Wright took the dog from the train men under the impression that it was for Toronto parties and would be claimed immediately. As no owner appeared, he had a paragraph inserted in an evening paper calling attention to the fact that an unclaimed dog was at the city hall station. But still no was at the city hall station. But still no owner. The dog was very noisey and howled terribly. Mr. Wright let him into the station yard, which is surrounded by a high fence. During the night the canine either escaped or was stolen. And now comes the injustice. Mr. Wright says that before Bailey sent in a claim he was informed by order of Mr. Webster that he would have to make good the loss with $50. informed by order of Mr. Webster that he would have to make good the loss with $50. He was informed that if he did not pay the amount he would have to leave the company's service. He refused peremptorily to make good the amount, and wrote the superintendent that he would leave the road in preference. After this Bailey's claim for $25 came in. Bailey did not think that Mr. Wright was to blame, but insisted that the company should recoup him to the the company should recoup him to the amount of $25. Mr. Wright held that it was not him that was to blame, but the servants at Collingwood, who made a mess servants at Collingwood, who made a mess of their duties.

Some correspondence had passed between him and the officials and the latter would hear of nothing but that Mr. Wright should pay the $25. The superintendent excused the men at Collingwood on the ground of ignorance as to whom the dog belonged. He also excused the conductor of the train that brought the dog down on the same grounds. Mr. Wright has of course left the service of the Northern, and says in his letter to the superintendent that he would sacrifice adozen situations rather than be unwarrantbly imposed, and made to bear the blunt of other men's mistakes.

The law of divorce in Canada is of the nost anomalous character. About half of the people of the country do not believe in divorce at all, but that is no reason why those who have no such religious scruples should be denied relief in cases of real should be denied relief in cases of real hardship. We should be sorry to see such looseness of the marriage tie as prevails in many of the neighboring states prevalent here, but so long as the principle of divorce is recognized, as it has been recognized for years, the means of relief should be placed within reach of the poor as well as the rich. It now costs a small fortune to put a bill of divorce through the senate; consequently a poor man or woman has no resequently a poor man or woman has no re-medy against an unfaithful partner. It is disgraceful that such a discrimination should exist, and legislators are much to blame for not authorizing the judges of the land to try such actions.
