From a Reader of the World.

I see in a recent edition of The World. I see in a recent edition of The Worldan article headed "Temperance Reform" from Bystander in the Week. This gentleman has no doubt read some on the subject he speaks of, but he has certainly never thought much about it, or he would never have made such loose statements as he has It is quite true that the senate re-jected both amendments, as they had a perfect right to do. He says that both amendments are reasonable and ought to have here adverted but his perfect of the world. Mtanwhile the roll of tragedies in-tragedies in-Strighelli, has shot himself at San Remo; while at Port Magnan, near Nice, a Ger-man lady, an habital frequenter of Monte Carlo, has been found senseless and bleeding on her bed, with her infant lying dead by her side. The lady has recovered. It is believed that after losing in all 250,000f. at Monte Carlo she opened a vein in order to bleed herself to death, and falling on her child involun-tarily suffocated it. Some mystery, how-I see in a recent edition of The World an article headed "Temperance Reform" from perfect right to do. He says that both amendments are reasonable and ought to have been adopted; but his proof for that the ver, hangs over the affair, and the usual ing in their favor, and that unless upheld by the sentiment of a great majority they become a dead letter. Now, sir, if our government will not legislate in favor of temperance without being upheld by a great majority, why should they not do the same when asked to legislate against it? He speaks disparagingly of the Crooks' act as multiplying the number of illicit grog shops; better have a few more of such and have the poor man take his wages home on Sturday night than to have him spend it for drink, which makes his poor, ragged family rather beg or run away than Put this in Your Scrap Book The bible contains 3,586,489 letters, 773,692 words, 31,173 verses, 1189 chapgreat majority, why should they not do the same when asked to legislate against it? ragged family rather beg of run away than to see their father as he come staggering home.

The writer referred to is apparently in favor of a moderate use of strong drink, for beer and light wines is nothing else, and the grape juice he speaks of in Spain and southern Europe cannot be supplied equal to the one hundredth part of the edmand in this country. If all would be moderate drinkers, and none drunkards, it would not be quite as bad as at present. If five glasses of liquor makes a man drunk one glass makes him one-fifth drink; and if five glasses makes a man a fool one glass makes him one-fifth fool. Moderate drinking is not necessary, it is not profitable for those who indulge, and r the example of a moderate drinker is ten times more injurious than that of the drunkard. It is not the drunkard who is fighting against prohibition, he has none if the drunkard. It is not the drunkard who is of the profits of the business. It is the drunkard. It is not the drunkard who is of the profits of the business. It is the well dressed, the educated, the so-called best society in our land that are the means of ruining the body and soul of our young the men. career. To this Bismarck has written a reply in which he states that, while it would give him great pleasure to put on record a tribute to Beaconsfield's great-ness, he cannot jeopardize the exist-ing friendly relations between his gov-ernment and that of Mr. Gladstone, by so doing. This is interpreted as a character-istically sarcastic way of Bismarck's say-ing that if he were to write what he thought, the contrast would be so marked men. It is total abstinence and prohibition we want—nothing short of it; and if the pro-fessing christians of to day would stop their tippling and make a firm stand in this matter we would soon rid our country of this sonl damning traffic.
