Notwithstanding all the care we have personally bestowed upon the correction of the press, so many glaring typographical errors have crept into the present edition of this Narrative, that were it not for the time necessary to prepare a second, we should unhesitatingly commit the impression to the flames, rather than suffer it to go forth to the public.

This difficulty will be obviated should the work be stereotyped, in which case all, to whom the publication is now gratuitously sent, shall be furnished with new copies.
