CHILDREN'S STORY COLUMN.

BY MRS. SYLVIA C. PA...

How Harry Batted his Boat

Grandpa gave Harry a small boat. It was about nine inches long and cold and his mother would not let him go to the pond to sail it. He was disappointed. He went into the room and saw some water in the bath tub. His mother was down stairs in the dining-room and she did not know Harry was. Harry turned on the water and soon the bath tub was full of water. He put his boat in the tub and blow on the sails. It ran down the side of the tub. Harry heard his mother calling him. He ran down stairs and out of the house. He forgot to take his sail boat in the bath tub. He ran for a long time and till the tub was full, then it overflowed on the floor. The water wet all the floor and soaked through the floor and down the ceiling of the room down stairs. The ceiling was very wet and some water dripped on the dining room carpet. His mother saw water on the carpet. She was surprised. She looked up at the ceiling. Then she ran upstairs to the bath room. She turned off the water and pulled the plug from the bath tub. The water ran out of the tub and Harry's sail boat lying on the floor. She knew Harry had been playing with the boat in the tub. She mopped up the water on the floor. When Harry came back she showed him the wet ceiling and scolded him. When his father came home he saw the wet ceiling he scolded Harry and how Harry to bed without supper.

A Thief

One day before Thanksgiving we hung two turkeys on nails outside the kitchen window. In the evening a man came into the yard. He saw the two turkeys hanging by the window and he wanted one. He crept quietly up to the largest turkey and pulled it off the nail. The woman and little girl heard him. They looked out of the window but they did not see anything. The negro went down under the window and kept quiet. The dog heard a noise. He ran round the house and saw the negro. He barked loudly. The negro threw stones at the dog. He ran and jumped over the fence. The dog could not jump over the fence. The negro ran away. When the woman went to get her turkeys the next day she was gone. She knew some things had stolen it. She was very sorry. She told a policeman about the thief.

The Robins.

Last summer two robins built a nest in a tree. It was a low tree and they made the nest nice and soft inside. She laid four blue eggs in it. She sat on the eggs a long time. She kept the nest warm. The father robin fed her. One day a baby robin came out of the nest. They were ugly. They had no feathers. Their eyes were shut. They were always hungry. They cried all the time. The old robins fed them the grass. They stopped crying. If a worm crawled under the ground they would dig into the ground and carry it to the nest. They carried the pieces to the baby robin's mouth.

An Aged Student.

Monarchs can never afford to leave off learning, whatever their subjects may do. A striking instance in point is furnished by an article in Pearson's Magazine, the proof-sheets of which were corrected by Queen Victoria herself.

From this article it appears that in spite of all her duties and responsibilities, in spite of the fact that she has devoted so much time to the study of politics as to have become one of the greatest living authorities on the practical politics of Europe, Queen Victoria has, within the later years of her reign, acquired an intimate acquaintance with a difficult language spoken by a large number of her subjects.

She makes it a custom, we are assured, to note in Hindustani the daily events of her life, keeping a diary for this special purpose. She speaks the language fluently, having devoted a part of every day for the last ten years to instruction in it, and to acquiring a knowledge of the intellectual treasures of the East.

The queen has surprised many of her Indian visitors by making unexpected observations in good Hindustani. As everybody knows, she is always attended, when at home, by one or more of her picturesque Indian servants. It is not, however, so generally known that she always speaks to them in their own tongue. However small the remark, or however serious the command, it comes to them in Hindustani.

Universal admiration has been expressed at the determination of the queen at an advanced age, not only to learn to speak Hindustani, but also to take an interest in the literature of India, and to acquaint herself with the ideas and aspirations of her Oriental subjects.

If pride leads the van, beggary brings up the rear.

We cannot give a reason for half the things we do.
