AGRICULTURE.

DRAINING.

Draining in wet swamps can be done all through the winter month with ease and comfort. We provide a plank about 12 feet long, either at the side of the ditch or in the bottom of it, to stand upon while working. This keeps the feet dry. But little frost penetrates awampy ground, even in the coldest weather, and if the surface that is partly dug is left loose at night, it can be broken up with ease. Contracts for ditching 2 feet deep, an 2 feet wide at the top, have been made for 25 cents a

FENCES.

It is said that the fences in this country cost more than all the houses; whether this is strictly true or not, it is beyond question that their first cost is immensuand that a vast expense is yearly iny curred to keep them in repair; and what makes a bad matter a great deal worse is the fact that a large part of this expense might be avoided. Farmers have built too many fences; some of these are not merely useless, but are a positive disadvantage Theytake up considerable land from which nothing of value is obtained, and they are in the way about cultivating and harvesting the crops. In some places these evils are so strongly manifested as to lead to a marked deduction in the number of fences. In some parts of Masschusette this is true to a great extent, a great number of roadside fences having been removed and many inside fences have been taken away. Where stone walls abound it is somewhat difficult to follow this example, but wooden fences can easily pe removed. For many purposes large fields are beter than small ones; if they were not, it is a question whether any advantages which small fields could furnish would be sufficient to justify the great expense of fencing.—Dirigo Rural POULTRY.

Without a free use of whitewash no poultry breeder can expect to keep his fowls healthy for any length of time, and to a neglect of this can be attriduted many of the disappointments and much of the loss experienced by amateurs, who do not realize, until they have paid dearly for their experience that cleanliness is one of the first principles of success in poultry keeping, and that lime, in different forms' is an invaluable agent in promoting cleanliness in poultry houses and amongst fowls. Where it can be done, without too much expense, we should advise persons, in building their poultry houses, use planed boards—at least' planed on the inside—in preference to rough ones, for it is far easier to keep the fowlhouse cleae when smooth boards are used, while the lice and other vermin cannot so readily find a longing-place. As a preventive is cheacer and better than a cure, we would advise those who build a poultry house to give it a good whitewashing, both inside and out, before the fowls are let inside. To make the whitewash still more distasteful to the vermin which have such a fancy for poultry, mix a small quantity of carbolic acid with the wash, stir it well till it dissolves, and then apply. It is not injurious to the fowls, but is to vermin, and at the same time is a geodorizer and disinfectant.-N. Q. Independent.

CELLARS.

There ought to be no cellars under any human habitation. The dampness and mould, and foul air inseparable from ordinary cellars will find their way into the upper parts of the building, and taint the air of every apartment, coming, as these noisome gasses will through the seams of the floors and other openings. If cellars must be had, the following points should be taken into consideration: 1st. The bottom of the cellar should be at least six feet under ground, and the bottom stone of the foundation should be a foot deeper than the cellar floor, for as the earth has frozen in these latitudes, in 1876, as low down as five feet, it is necessary that the bottom should be below the point of frost. 2nd. The cellar wall may be a foot or two above the level of the ground, to afford the convenience of light and ventilation through windows better than grating. 3rd. A gravel sill is better for a cellar and foundation than clay, which is often treacherous and uncertain. The front stones of the foundations should, in all cases, be flat and broad, and the seams and joinings should be close and well-fitting, and a good many of the stones should go clear through the wall, and, better still, if they were laid in mortar, half cement, and half sand. 4th. To insure the dryness of a cellar, a trench, a foot deep and more, should be dug around the cellar next the wall, and filled up with breken rock, leading the water outside of the building at one corner under and through the wall. 5th. The ceiling of the cellar should be coverd with two good coats of plaster, and the space between it and the floor above should be filled in with the same suitable material to avert or decompose any odors which might make their way through cellar floors 6th. The walls and ceiling should be well whitewashed, at least once a year.—W. W. Hall.

DISEASES OF ANIMALS.

It is well known that doctors differ, and notwithstanding medical treatment, valuable animals will often die. Ii diseases cannot always be cured they can often be prevented, and whatever tends to promote health and thrift, so far prevents discase, or assists the efforts of nature to throw it off. Among these preventives we consider it very imp rtant to have at all times accessible in horses. neat pattle and sheep, rock salt in lumps, where they can get it as often and as much as appetite requires and their nature prompts. It promotes digestion and health. Hogs should have at regular times, a supply of unleached ashes, which we have seen them eat with great avidity, and also charcoal. We do not undertake to explain how this affects the system. Perhaps the kind of food generally given to hogs generates too much acidity. This may be the reason, or there may be some other reason, but the effects are certainly to increase appetite and promote thrift. In the cultivation of the earth and growth of plants as well as in the care of his stock, the farmer continually meets with results which he must take as they are, without being able to understand them. Poul-try should have dry and well ventilated apartments, free access to gravel, pure fresh water, broken oyster shells or broken bones, and occasionally animal food in addition to the other. We find sommon cracklings from the soap-makers, which comes in cakes from fifty to seventy pounds an excellent food for them. A cake of it may be left in their yard, to pick at, and a lump of it kept in soak for a couple of days at a time to be softened This is greedily eaten. Regularity in feeding animals is also an essential to health and sound judgment also, in giving them the proper quantity. no more and no less. On one occasion, complaining to our hired man that the pigs seemed hungry, he said " he wondered at that, as the last time he fed them, three days ago, he was sure he gave them enough to last for that time." In erecting buildings for stock, no currents of air should be allowed, and as a general thing, they suffer more from heat and confined unwholesome air than from extreme cold, against which they have their natural protection. For milch cows we consider the daily use of the card as essential as for the horse, and there is every reason why the same amount of friction on the surface of the skin and the same attention to cleanliness, should be attended to in one case as in the other. A good currying of a horse is said to be equal to half a feed. With stall-fed animals the
