> MAYOR TAYLOR has entered upon his duties. He has a grand opportunity, and ii seems certain be will improve it. He does not need to have necessary re-forms pointed out to him, as his experi-ence in municipal affairs while chairman of finance has rendered him familiar with almost every department of the city's administration. He will help to amend what may appear bad, and do more, it is hoped, and that is, vigorously pushed forward new improvements which have long been in obeyance. And, as a fitting fringe to this last was his first official act in signing debentures for local improvements to the amount of $05,000. The outgoing mayor during his term of office showed much decision in checking unwarrantable aggressions of corporations and others, and it is certain that Mayor Taylor will follow his example.

> Did it ever occur to you when strolling along the platforms of our railway stations, while trains are coming or going; what a veritable spring of life ebbs and flows humanity's varied types? Joy and sorrow psssing side by side, people going and coming on missions of life—some on errands of death; the grave and gay and the old and young meet; you see a merry group round a bride groom setting ont on their journey bride groom, setting out on their journey through life; turn round you see a group of mourners whose anguish faces bespeak tales of woe; the long separated are united, and the long united part; lovers meet in greatest rapture, the fond mother clasps her infant child in fond ecstacy of oy, and the father gives his final counsel to a departing son about to seek his fortune in a foreign land. All in life, bustle and confusion until the conductor's cruel cry brings all to a realization that the last sweet-bitter moment has come. In a short five minutes how quiet the surroundings become.
