Dear Sir/Madam,
A gallant attempt at encapsulating the history of Canadian missions in Southern Africa (October's issue page 11)!

But permit me to correct some factual errors:

(1) Zimbabwe did not become independent until April 18, 1980.

(2) Our Trade Commission office in Salisbury, Rhodesia was closed when the government of the day unilaterally declared its own independence on November 11, 1965.

(3) We did not reopen in 1979. Terry Bacon presented his credentials as the first Canadian High Commissioner to Zimbabwe in April, 1980. He represented Canada on a non-resident basis (as did the rest of us in Lusaka) until the High Commission in Salisbury opened its doors in September (or was it October?), 1980. Bob McLaren was the first resident Canadian High Commissioner.

(4) The name of Salisbury was not formally changed to Harare until 1981.

Those of us in Lusaka in 1978-81 were, both literally and figuratively, on the front line and the memory of that time is still very vivid.

J.A. Licharson, Counsellor
Kingston, Jamaica

DID YOU KNOW?

As of January 11, 1985, the embassy operations in South Africa will be split between Cape Town and Pretoria. The ambassador and accompanying embassy personnel will be residing in Cape Town during the parliamentary session, normally January-June. All communications must be addressed to the Canadian Embassy Cape Town from January 1985 onward.
